The Rothschild Film

JOSEPH M. SCHENCK has presented George Arliss in "The House of Rothschild." In the advertisements the producers are quoting the elder Mayer Amschel Rothschild's dying words to his five sons:

"Trade with dignity. Live with dignity. Walk the world with dignity."

And they add:

"See the Rothschilds as ardent Jews and loyal patriots! See the Rothschilds in their true Jewish dignity, and with their true Jewish ethics!"

The film, based on episodes in the life of the famous Jewish bankers, has been hailed by the critics as a masterpiece, and George Arliss is showered with the highest praise.

George Arliss is a great artist. In the role of Nathan Rothschild he is more brilliant than ever. The film is interesting indeed, though hardly as effective and artistic as it could have been if the propaganda element had not been so injudiciously overemphasized. The play on this same theme, produced a few years ago at the Burgtheater in Vienna, was infinitely superior to this film as a work of art.

But we are not concerned at this time with "The House of Rothschild" as an artistic screen production. Though it may be regarded by many people, as it is apparently regarded by the producers, as a pro-Jewish propagandist film, it is well to point out that a sentimentalized idealization of the Rothschilds is not a defense of or a tribute to Jewry. The Rothschilds cannot be considered as the typical representatives or leaders of the Jewish people. The Jews have never viewed them in that light.

A number of the Rothschilds were undoubtedly men of integrity and of high ideals. Most of them were shrewd financiers, and much of their success as financiers was due in a measure to the fact that they were guided by the finer Jewish traditions of integrity and idealism. The most popular of the Rothschilds, Baron Edmond, is universally admired by the Jewish people not because of his genius as a banker but because of his humanitarian, philanthropic activities and chiefly because of his boundless love for Zion which he demonstrated with far sighted sagacity and unparalleled generosity long before Theodore Herzl laid the foundations of political Zionism. Baron Edmond de Rothschild is beloved by all Jewry, but not as a financial wizard.

The Rothschilds, however great and good they may have been, represented only a slight portion of Jewry. They have occupied but a small corner in the picture of Jewish life. Throughout the ages the Jewish people had distinguished itself mainly by its intellectual and moral contributions to the world. A sympathetic delineation of Jewish financial wizards, skilfully playing

Macy Action On Boycott Hailed Here

Gimbel and Altman Follow Lead; Anti-Nazi Front Strengthened

Supporters of the anti-Nazi boycott yesterday hailed the action of New York department stores in adhering to the boycott as a step toward the creation of a solid anti-Hitler front.

Gimbel Brothers' Department Store and B. Altman and Company have followed the action adopted by R. H. Macy and Company in ascribing to the boycott of Nazi goods, a development regarded in anti-Nazi circles as of the utmost importance to the success of the boycott.

Decrying the delay of the Macy concern in openly announcing fealty to the boycott committee as

Tribute Is Paid To Rabbi Wise On Anniversary

His Career Reviewed and Eulogized by Many Notables

A career of striving for the ideals of Americanism and Judaism was reviewed and eulogized yesterday at celebrations honoring the sixtieth birthday of Rabbi Stephen S. Wise.

At an anniversary service in Carnegie Hall, at a luncheon in the Hotel Biltmore, at a reception by the College Division of the American Jewish Congress, Jewish and non-Jewish leaders praised Rabbi Wise's struggles for his principles. Throughout the country, in Boston, Los Angeles, Chicago and Portland, Oregon, similar functions took place.

At the service yesterday morning Dr. Wise's "sincerity of purpose," his "authentic voice of prophecy," his "noble character and warm heart," and his independence were all described glowingly by the speakers.

Rabbi Wise declared Robert Szold, former president of the Zionist Organization of America, "works, day by day, hour after hour, fighting for the causes he holds dear. Sincerity of purpose runs deep through his character.

"Wise has brought a forthrightness of concept and a stalwartness of approach to the American Jew," Szold continued, "which has stiffened his backbone, thrown back his shoulders, and caused him to walk uprightly, consciously proud of his Jewish heritage."

Mrs. Kohut's Talk

Rebekah Kohut, Jewish woman leader, recalled that she knew the veteran rabbi when he was a boy of thirteen. "I have seen him grow up into ripe manhood, but he hasn't changed. He is the same boy I knew. When a fight is on, he fights, not caring what the cost might be to him, and sometimes he has paid very dearly for those fights. But we know that he can

Minister Hits Naturalized Austria Jews

Jewish Quota Ordered in Boy Scout Association

(Jewish Telegraphic Agency)

VIENNA, March 18.—The Austrian Minister of Justice, Dr. Kurt Schuschnigg, leader of the Christian Socialist party, who today addressed a gathering of judges and officials charged with the administration of justice in Austria, declared that only "bodenstaendigkeit," native origin, should play a decisive role in the administration of justice. He said that Jews naturalized, but not born in Austria, should not be permitted to play prominent roles in Austrian law and justice.

After an official denial that numerus clausus have been introduced for Jewish boys in the Austrian Boy Scout Association, an official order was issued today by the All-American Scout Association, under the signature of Commander Kratsky, stating that "acceptance of non-Aryan members should be limited and headquarters consulted before the acceptance of non-Aryans."

Endeks Arrested For Scholar Attack

Six Students Charged With Beating Handelsmann, Aged Jewish Dean

(Jewish Telegraphic Agency)

WARSAW, March 18.—Six Endek students of the National Democrat party, anti-Semitic and anti-government group, were arrested today on the charge of having beaten Professor Herced Handelsmann, aged Jewish scholar and dean of the historical faculty at the University of Warsaw.

Professor Handelsmann was severely beaten late last Wednesday night as he was returning from a student meeting where he had spoken sharply against the attempt of anti-Semites to introduce an "Aryan clause" which would have excluded all Jewish students from the student self-aid associations. The University Senate rejected the clause.

Laski Strikes At 'Assurances' On Reich Jews

Anglo-Jewish Leader Calls Them 'Delusive'

(Jewish Telegraphic Agency)

LONDON, March 18. — The world outside of Germany must continue to regard any assurances from the Reich regarding treatment of the Jews as "delusive" as long as the government tolerates perpetual incitement against its Jewish population, Neville Laski, Anglo-Jewish leader, declared today addressing the session of the Board of Deputies of British Jews.

Mr. Laski declared that while the Reich Ministry of Economics is expressing alarm at the steady fall in German exports, the Ministry of Propaganda is closely collaborating with organizations such as the so-called Hago, Nazi Trade organization which has as its purpose the ruination of Jewish trade and industry.

"So long as the German government tolerates the perpetual incitement against the Jews," Mr. Laski said, "foreign opinion must regard its assurances of liberty for

Women's Body Headed by Mrs. Catt Petitions President Roosevelt

Women of prominence from every part of the country, led by a committee of ten headed by Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, in a petition made public yesterday requested President Franklin D. Roosevelt to give assurance that restrictive rules be administered by consular officers abroad with utmost consideration in the cases of political, racial and religious refugees.

Aimed primarily for the relief of German refugees, the message to the Chief Executive states that since July the total number of those admitted from Germany, including all races and creeds, has not yet reached 600. It is contended in the letter that a more liberal admission would not result in the refugees becoming public charges, as friends and relatives are ready to render assistance and prevent further aggravation of America's unemployment problem.

Attached to the petition is a booklet, "Asylum for Refugees Under Our Immigration Laws." It states the views of former Governor Alfred E. Smith, Professor Raymond Moley, Secretary of State Cordell Hull and a number of foreign statesmen and leaders. United States statutes relative to the subject and some important earlier calls in favor of asylum are cited.

The letter reads as follows:

"Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt
"The White House
"Washington, D. C.
"Dear Mr. President:

"The undersigned are informed that a serious handicap to the successful disposition of some of the German refugees in whom the International Committees organized for that purpose are interested, is the executive order of President Hoover, issued as a news release in September, 1930, which authorized the State Department to warn American Consular Officers to require definite proof that an alien applying for an immigration visa will not become a public charge in this country and thus add to our unemployment problem.

"That order has been so strenuously enforced that immigration has almost ceased. Under the immigration law the German quota is 25,957. That number is far from being filled. According to the figures given by the High Commissioner, James G. McDonald, there are about 25,000 German emigres in France, 20,000 being in Paris; Holland is caring for 5,000 refugees; Switzerland 2,500; Czecho Slovakia 5,000; Poland 6,000; England 3,000; Belgium 2,500; Palestine 6,500. The United States, always proud of its hallowed principle of the right of asylum for political and religious refugees, ought certainly to do its share. The total number of refugees from Germany of all races and creeds admitted to the United States, since July, amounts to less than 600. The admission of a fraction of the German quota cannot materially affect the economic conditions of this country, particularly

2,000 Nazis Howl for Boycott Of Jews in Brooklyn Meeting

An offensive designed to make the United States free for Hitlerites in the manner of modern Germany was launched on Saturday night in Schwaben Hall at Knickerbocker and Myrtle avenues in Ridgewood, Brooklyn.

In a hall jammed to overflowing with uniformed and civilian Nazis, Fritz Gissibl, national commander of the Friends of New Germany, and Severin Winterscheidt, secretary of the United German Societies of New York, demanded that American Jews be boycotted. Their demands with met with howling approval from 2,000 spectators, who in the closing minutes of the program pledged allegiance to the Hitler Government.

A number of fetes under the auspices of the League of Friends of New Germany were announced as an instrument to stir New Yorkers, particularly Germans and German Americans, into conformity with the boycott of Jews in the United States.

Pamphlets were passed out to those attending the Saturday evening affair inviting all to attend

Zionist Issues New Appeal For Members

Margulies Urges Cooperation Among Leaders and Press

An appeal to district leaders and to the Jewish press of the country to cooperate in the membership campaign of the Zionist Organization of America was made by Morris Margulies, secretary, in a statement issued yesterday.

Margulies in his statement points out that the membership campaign of the Z. O. A. has met thus far with gratifying results, the enrollment showing an increase of thirty-three per cent over the corresponding period of last year.

"But," stated Margulies, "we shall not rest until we have at least doubled the membership of the Zionist Organization. During the past several months, hundreds of meetings have been held in the interest of the membership campaign—such speakers assisting as Dr. Solomon Goldman of Chicago, Abraham Goldberg of New York and Pierre van Paassen.

"It is to be hoped that the editors of the Jewish press in America will emphasize to their readers that Zionism consists of more than giving an occasional contribution to the campaign, that the real brunt and burden of the movement, and the real satisfaction of helping to establish the Jewish Homeland rests on the organized Zionist activity which means the membership."

Booklet Describes the Growth of Hatred Throughout Ages

Anti-Semitism, a study outline prepared by the National Council of Jewish Women and released yesterday, presents a complete bibliography of past and contemporary Jewish problems.

The nineteen-page booklet traces anti-Semitism throughout history to the present day and gives reference to authoritative books on the subject.

The work is divided into six parts: The problem of anti-Semitism today; anti-Semitism in ancient times; medieval anti-Semitism—the religious factor; modern anti-Semitism — political and racial factors; economic factors of modern anti-Semitism; the social factors of modern anti-Semitism.

Zionist's Family Sails to Palestine

Fishman Will Join Wife and Three Children After Liquidating Business

The wife and three children of Samuel Fishman, New York Zionist leader, left for Palestine Friday on the Pulaski. Mr. Fishman plans to join them there as soon as he liquidates his business affairs here, he stated. He resides in Brooklyn.

By sending his family to Palestine before his departure, Fishman is following the example of more than sixty families of American Jews, who have also gone to Palestine ahead of their husbands and fathers.

"My purpose in sending my family to Palestine at this time," said Fishman, "is primarily the belief that Jews should have their own homeland. I, in common with other sincere Zionists, love Palestine. Another important consideration is that I am anxious that my children receive a purely Jewish education and the proper Jewish environment. Only in Palestine is that possible."

The children are Hertzl, thirteen; Arye, nine, and Bas-Sheva, eight. Fishman has purchased an orange grove consisting of twenty-five dunams (about six acres).

PREACHED IN CITY PULPITS

Personal Faith Needed

That it is insufficient to regard religion from the standpoint of intellectual and cultural interests and that an approach to it should be with a view of acquiring a personal faith to live by, was the burden of Rabbi Samuel H. Goldenson's sermon at Temple Emanu-El, 1 East Sixty-Fifth street, on Saturday morning.

"We are confronted with a paradox, an incongruity," Rabbi Goldenson said. "We are living at a time when there is much discussion of religion. Bookshelves on religion are growing, magazines contain numerous articles on it. It is the topic of conversation everywhere. At the same time there is marked decline in religious worship.

"The reason for this phenomenon is that the interest in religion has changed to one of intellectual character."

While such intellectual interest is but a natural development, according to Rabbi Goldenson, he at the same time urged that those who speak for religion do not act merely as "external witnesses" but offer some "internal testimony." He conceived true religion as a personal matter for the soul and said that it was truly felt only by those for whom it was a necessity, "an irresistible expression."

Moses was cited by Rabbi Goldenson as an example of one expressing himself religiously in those terms. Moses was determined to go forth to sacrifice for the sake of his suffering brethren, instead of remaining in peace when he had an opportunity, the rabbi pointed out.

Regrets White House Silence

Regrets regarding White House silence on the Hitlerite treatment of the Jews were expressed by Rabbi Louis I. Newman of Congregation Rodeph Sholom, 7 West Eighty-third street, in his Sunday morning sermon.

"President Roosevelt has ample precedents for governmental intercession on behalf of persecuted German Jewry," Rabbi Newman charged. "Previous governments have not failed to make their position known when Jews in European countries have been maltreated. Apparently no heed has been paid in Washington to data gathered on this subject by Max J. Kohler.

"If the President had wished to find a way to reassure the Jewish community of this country and their co-religionists abroad, he could have already done so.

"Surely President Roosevelt will not wish to be deaf to the opinions of large numbers of his fellow-citizens, and consider himself above comment regarding his inaction on the German situation since its tragic inception. In the end, he and is official family will be grateful to those who have spurred him to a wise and statesmanlike utterance in the name of human liberty, equality and righteousness."

Happiness in Sacrifice

Rediscovery of essential values in some ancient forms of worship was called for in the week-end sermon of Rabbi Joseph Zeitlin of Temple Ansche Chesed, West End avenue and 100th street.

"Modern man often looks with disdain upon the ancient system of sacrificial worship in religion," Rabbi Zeitlin stated. "However, even though we would not desire a reversion to such customs, we still can discover in the old habits that untold happiness emanates from sacrifice not only on the part of individuals but on the part of nations as well.

"Civilized peoples are called upon today to do their share and to sacrifice their securely neutral and complacent position in order to give expression to their indignation about the action of a barbaric people.

"Public opinion must protest against smug passivity."

Eulogy For Dr. Wise

A eulogy of Rabbi Stephen S. Wise on the occasion of his sixtieth birthday, featured the Sunday sermon of Rabbi Jacob Katz of the Montefiore Hebrew Congregation, Hewitt and Macy places, Bronx.

"When Zionism was an anathema amongst the reform and only a dream amongst the orthodox, Rabbi Wise made himself the spokesman for true Zionism, the making of Palestine a cultural center for the Jewish people, irradiating a profound spiritual power throughout the Diaspora. What conviction and courage in those days such a platform demanded in the heart of young Wise! He then set a sail upstream He had reached the harbor whence he can view his work achieved."

Need for Jewish Unity

It is difficult for friendly Gentiles to understand how a people as imperilled as the Jews can be so disunited, Rabbi Israel Goldstein declared Sunday morning before Congregation B'nai Jeshurun, Eighty-eighth street, West of Broadway.

"The Gentile world is surprised at the lack of Jewish unity in the face of the present emergencies," Rabbi Goldstein said.

"We should give heed to the categorical imperative of unity which devolves upon us today. The Gentile world conceives the term 'Jew' as embracing more than religious kinship and as including racial and cultural community. All Jews would do well to accept that definition instead of escaping it as many have sought to do by 'ipse-dixit' definitions of the term 'Jew' as a religious affiliation only.

"The time has come when we must be realists and acknowledge, accept and espouse all the implications of our Jewish identity."

Right of Americans To Continue Boycott Fight, Says Chaitkin

"It is the natural right of American citizens to continue to fight with the weapon of the boycott for the ideals for which America fought in 1917," declared Jacob Chaitkin, counsel to the boycott committee of the American Jewish Congress, in a radio address over Station WARD.

"If," he continued, "a few years after the Civil war the South had proclaimed the return of slavery, the defeat of the North would not have been more ignominious than is the moral defeat of America in the World War, judged by the events of today."

Jewish Students Given Essay Contest Prizes

Prizes in the metropolitan inter-university essay contest for Jewish students writing on Jewish subjects, were awarded at a meeting at Temple Israel Friday night, by Rabbi Baruch Braunstein, counselor to Jewish students at Columbia University. No first prize was awarded.

The second prize of $15 went to Meyer Levine, law student at New York University, for his essay on "Have Jews a Future?" Jack Lauder, of Long Island University, writing on "Fascism and Judaism; Are They Compatible?" received the third prize of $10.

...iddish Institute Praised by Sapir

...mpetence and Energy Is Lauded—Group Conducts Work in Yiddish

Praise for the work of the Yiddish Scientific Institute for "its clear-sightedness, energy and high competence" in research work was voiced in a letter from Dr. Edward Sapir, president of the Inter-University Council for Jewish Social Research, to Jacob Szur, manager of the Yiddish Scientific Institute, who is now touring the country in connection with a drive to raise funds for the Institute. Mr. Szur is speaking in Chicago to-night.

Commenting on the fact that the Institute conducts its work in Yiddish, Professor Sapir says in his message:

"Yiddish is a defacto language of probably a majority of Jewish people and therefore it would be obvious that no serious work in the understanding of contemporary Jewish problems can be undertaken except through the specifically Yiddish approach. It is astonishing that this simple fact has not been clearly realized. I take the greatest pleasure in commending it to the earnest and sympathetic consideration of all those who are eager to do something substantial for Jewish Scientific Research."

Eccentricities of the Famous Are Discussed By Elias Grossman, Who Has Etched Them

Mussolini, Gandhi and Einstein Have Sat Before Him

By DAVID BERNSTEIN

Mussolini, the strong silent man who really isn't dictatorial at all—

Chaim Bialik, the sage of modern Palestine, who gets as excited as a child about each little thing he happens to discuss—

Gandhi, sitting at his spinning wheel and making witty remarks to newspapermen—

Einstein, who could only converse in Italian—

Tagore, who didn't want to live in America because it was too expensive for him—

Governor Ritchie of Maryland and Mayor Dizengoff of Tel Aviv, President Robinson of City College and Dr. York-Steiner, who was secretary to Theodor Herzl—

These are the men of whom Elias Grossman can speak, whose intimate eccentricities he had the opportunity to note and, perhaps, to transcribe on copper.

For Elias Grossman has made etchings of these men, as well as of many others. Some of his work is now on exhibition at the Jewish Club, on the roof of the Park Royal Hotel, 23 West Seventy-third street. The exhibition, which opened a little over a week ago, will continue until March 25.

Yesterday, in the large room of the club, its walls covered with his etchings, Grossman related anecdotes about some of his models.

Business Is Business

There was, for instance, the old, bent beggar in the little town in Poland, whom Grossman paid fifteen cents a day for posing. After one day the beggar returned with fifteen of his comrades.

"What's this?" asked Grossman.

"More models for you," the beggar replied. "You give me the same fifteen cents, and look, you'll have more models to work on."

"And who's going to pay them?" the artist asked.

The answer was simple. From the same fifteen cents, they would get five cents to divide among themselves, while the first beggar would keep the ten cents extra each day. Grossman smiled as he described this budding capitalist in the little Polish village.

Then he spoke of Mussolini.

"It was easier to get to Mussolini than to approach my beggar," he said. "I had done an etching of the American Ambassador at Rome, Mr. Henry P. Fletcher, which Mussolini saw. He immediately expressed a desire to meet me. You see, he liked American artists because he liked our Ambassador. I spent forty hours with Mussolini, working from five to seven each afternoon for twenty days.

Premier Plays Violin

"One afternoon, he showed me a violin someone had given him as a gift. He offered to play for me. He played 'Ave Maria,' by Schubert. It was very beautiful.

"Never at any time did he give me the least impression of what most people think dictators are like. Rather, he seemed child-like in his desire to show off all his possessions, and human in his relations with his subordinates."

Grossman etched Chaim Bialik four months ago in Tel Aviv. "Bialik loves to pose," he said. "There are very many portraits of him, but few good ones, because all the artists try to flatter him.

"During his conversation, Bialik gets as enthusiastic about little things as a child with a new toy. He read his poetry to me, declaiming with wild abandon. He always kept me longer than we had arranged for."

Grossman described his difficulties in getting to Gandhi. Only when he had heard that the artist had made etchings of Mussolini, Einstein and especially Tagore, did Gandhi agree to sit for him. He would sit on the floor, and Grossman would work lying flat on his stomach. Monday was the day of silence, and the only way in which the two men could communicate with one another was by passing notes.

Etcher, Not Collector

"You kept those notes, of course?" he was asked.

Grossman smiled.

"No," he replied, "I didn't realize their value at the time. I was more interested in making a good etching than in gathering collectors' items."

"Gandhi was very witty," Grossman continued. "Later, when Jo Davidson came to model him, he said to me, 'You see, Mr. Grossman, not only am I being made on copper, but I'm also going to be made of mud!' Before, after and during his meals, Gandhi prayed like a pious Jew."

It was in Vienna that Grossman etched Rabindranath Tagore. "He was the nicest model I had ever had until that time," Grossman declared. "Even if I would have met him in ragged clothes, I would still be sure he was a poet. We discussed literature and art, and he expressed the opinion that America is growing too rapidly. He said he thought it was too expensive to live in America."

Difficulties With Einstein

Einstein was the next personality for Grossman to take up. The etcher began to speak of his difficulty in getting to the Professor, of his difficulty in taking with him after he did get to him—since Einstein speaks little English, and Grossman no German. They compromised with Italian.

And then Grossman looked hurriedly at his watch, snatched his coat, hat and briefcase-full of sketches, muttered something about an appointment, and dashed away.

So any interesting sidelights on Professor Einstein that Grossman may have noted must go unheralded until posterity, or the next interviewer, reminds the artist of his duty to tell it to the world.

Work Now on Exhibition at Jewish Club in New York

The Bulletin's Day Book

One of the not unimportant cogs in the Nazi propaganda machine is Baron von Hahn, Vienna representative of the Deutsche Nachrichten Bureau, the coordinated German news agency now supplanting the Wolff Agency and the Telegrafen Bureau. In his role of journalist, the Baron has easy access to official circles where, it can be justifiably suspected, he does not hesitate to seek good will for the Nazi cause.

By birth a Balt, like Dr. Alfred Rosenberg, Hahn's virulent hatred of Russia is matched only by his almost paranoic hatred of Jews. And like so many of his fellow-workers in the Nazi cause—fortunately for the rest of the world—he is not blessed with too much discretion.

Meeting a Britisher recently in Vienna, the worthy baron, assuming that his auditor was fully sympathetic, talked at great length and confidentially of Nazi plans, particularly as they involved a religious revival group in England of which his auditor was a member.

Finally made aware of his faux pas by the amazement and rising indignation apparent in the Britisher's face, the baron began to reverse himself and launch into a tirade against Russia and the Jews in an attempt to win over his listener. When the latter, unable to stand the exhibition any longer, rose and left abruptly, the baron pursued him to the door and magnificently declared: "Perhaps if we had begun the evening by confessing our sins to one another, we should not have reached this point."

President Roosevelt is the most outstanding public figure in the world, according to the unanimous vote of one hundred journalism students at New York University. He heads the list of ten public leaders who were being rated from the standpoint of news values.

Hitler was voted as ranking second, with ninety-nine votes, and Mae West received the least number of votes, eleven.

Dr. Albert Einstein ranked third in a vote taken last year, and Hitler ninth.

In the order of their importance, the following were selected this year:

Lindbergh, ninety-one votes; Mussolini, seventy-eight; La Guardia, sixty-seven; General Johnson, sixty-five, Babe Ruth, thirty-five; Dollfuss, thirty-four; Greta Garbo, thirty-four; Alfred E. Smith, twenty-nine.

Recommends Council As Unity Instrument

The Joint Consultative Council should be the medium through which the principle and practice of a united front in American Jewry can be extended, Rabbi Louis I. Newman asserted in an address before the Jewish Fellowship at the Hotel McAlpin yesterday afternoon.

"It would be folly to ignore the existence of the instrument of joint action on the part of the American Jewish Committee, the American Jewish Congress and the B'nai B'rith," Dr. Newman said. "If deemed advisable," he added, "it may be wise to increase the scope and membership of the Joint Council to include representatives of other major Jewish organizations in the field of the defense of Jewish rights."

Rhode Island Assembly Asks U. S. Rap Nazis

Action Asked on Repressions Against Jewish People of Reich

(Special to the J.D.B.)

PROVIDENCE, March 18.—A resolution adopted by the Rhode Island General Assembly condemning the Hitlerite policy of oppressing German minorities is pending, awaiting the signature of Gov. T. F. Green.

The resolution was introduced by Representative Charles Brown of Providence, (Rep.) only Jewish member of the House. It was guided through the Upper Legislative branch by Senator Paul J. Robin (Dem.).

The resolution expresses the "shocked" feelings of the American people over the Nazi persecutions. Congress is asked to use its influence in behalf of oppressed German nationals. The bill cites numerous precedents of American action in this connection.

The resolution points out that Germany is bound by treaty pledges made to the United States assuring economic and political rights to minority groups and asks the Rhode Island delegation in Congress to press the matter for speedy action.

The Resolution

"WHEREAS, the treatment of these minority groups has shocked the conscience of mankind and violated the principles of humanity; and

"WHEREAS, on many historic occasions from 1840 to 1919, intercessions have been made by the United States on behalf of citizens of states other than the United States, oppressed or persecuted by their governments or peoples, indicating that for nearly 100 years the traditional policy of the United States has been to take cognizance of such invasion of human rights; and

"WHEREAS, the German Reich stands pledged to the United States to accord its "nationals who belong to racial, religious, or linguistic minorities . . . the same treatment and security in law and in fact as other nationals"; now therefore be it

"RESOLVED, that the general assembly of the State of Rhode Island expresses its profund feelings of surprise and pain upon learning of the discriminations and oppression imposed by the Reich upon its minority groups; and be it further

"RESOLVED, that the general assembly of the State of Rhode Island expresses its earnest hope that the German Reich will speedily alter its policy and restore to its minority groups the civil and political rights of which they have been deprived; and be it further

"RESOLVED, that the secretary of state transmit a copy of this resolution to each Senator and Representative of the State of Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States and that they be urged to use their influence toward passage of a similar resolution by the Congress of the United States."

Tydings Protest Losing Out; Washington Has Active Week

Interest in Dickstein Investigation Is Keen—B'nai B'rith Petition Before Roosevelt—Other Activities at Capitol

By NATHAN KOENIG

(Staff Correspondent, J.D.B.)

WASHINGTON, March 18.—Capitol Hill is a busy place these days and the boys are swarming and milling around with one eye cocked on the White House and the other eye centered on the folks back home. But, from the way the Congressmen have acted in the past week, there is a general tendency to take the one eye off the White House and with both eyes try to see how the home folks are acting. After all, election is only eight months off.

The veterans bonus bill, passed in the House by a vote of 295 to 125, put a number of Congressmen on the spot. General sentiment is that the bill was passed as an overture to the veterans and that down deep in their hearts most Congressmen who voted for the measure are praying that the Senate will kill it.

Jewish Congressmen Support Bonus

Of the nine Jewish Congressmen, seven voted for the measure. These seven came from metropolitan centers. They are Representatives Sol Bloom, Emanuel Celler, Samuel Dickstein, and William I. Sirovich, all of New York; Mrs. Florence P. Kahn of San Francisco, Henry Ellenbogen of Pittsburgh and Adolph Sabath of Chicago. One New Yorker, Representative Theodore A. Peyser, voted against the bonus bill. The other Jewish member who voted against the measure was Representative Herman P. Kopplemann of Hartford.

Tydings Protest Losing Out

Pressure in the Senate for favorable action on the Tydings resolution, calling for a Senate protest against the persecution of Jews in Germany, has subsided to a great extent. Apparently the resolution has been pigeonholed, at least for the time being, by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

In the House there is considerable interest in the Dickstein resolution calling for a Congressional investigation of Nazi propaganda activities in the United States. Passage of this proposal is assured as a result of the concentrated work of Representative Dickstein, sponsor of the resolution. Dickstein, by the way, is taking it for granted that he will be named chairman of the investigating committee of seven members to be appointed by the Speaker. Some Congressmen secretly believe that the results of the investigation would be more significant if Dickstein were not named to head it.

Petitions Pour In

Petitions protesting the Nazi government's treatment of Jews in Germany have been flowing into the House and Senate rather freely during the last three months. The central organization of B'nai B'rith took its master petition direct to the White House the other day. The document was delivered personally by former Senator Alfred M. Cohen of Cincinnati, president of the organization. It was left with Marvin H. McIntyre, one of President Roosevelt's secretaries, to be brought to the attention of President Roosevelt.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., March 18.—Rabbi Mendel Lewittes of New York, one of the youngest orthodox rabbis in the country, is being considered as a successor to Rabbi Reuben J. Magil, who resigned from Kodimoh Synagogue March 1 to go to Buffalo.

Rabbi Lewittes has been invited to fill the Kodimoh pulpit for a week end as a test. He received his A. B. degree from the Rabbi Isaac Elchanan Yeshiva in 1932. Rabbi Lewittes is twenty-three years old and is considered an accomplished scholar and orator. He was asked to come here by a Synagogue committee which heard him preach in New York. The committee consisted of Nathan E. Goldstein, Louis Katz, Benjamin Bearg, Louis Saffer, Benjamin Swirsky and Max Katz.

First president of the first Zionist society formed in 1901 in Detroit under the name of Yavneh, he was for thirty years a leader in Zionism. When Dr. Chaim Weizmann came to the United States in 1921 to organize the Keren Hayesod, Goldman was elected the fund's first president here. He was honored by orthodox Jews for his devotion to every important cause.

House to Consider Nazi Probe Bill on Tuesday

(Special to the J.D.B.)

WASHINGTON, March 18.—An agreement to have the Dickstein resolution, which calls for a Congressional investigation of Nazi propaganda activities in the United States, come up for consideration next Tuesday has been reached among the House leaders, it was learned yesterday.

Representative Samuel Dickstein, author of the measure, said he had been informed that the agreement had been reached. The delay in getting immediate House action on the proposal, he said, has been due to the pressure of major legislative measures now under consideration.

Jewish Plight Under Nazis Finds Sympathy In Denmark

Karin Michaelis, Danish Author and Feminist, Deplores Reich Attitude — Asserts Her Country Knows No Jewish Problem

(Karin Michaelis, famous Danish novelist and short story writer, several of whose stories have appeared in this country, recently discussed the Jewish situation in Germany with Julius Barnsch, exiled German novelist.

Besides being one of the most important figures in present-day Danish literature, she has also been active in the feminist movement in Denmark. She is also considered an authority in child psychology. In her early youth she traveled widely in Europe and in the United States. At present she resides at Thuroe, Denmark. Her first international success, "The Dangerous Age," was published in 1910. She was born in 1872.

The following is an extract of her views on the Jewish question.)

By KARIN MICHAELIS

THUROS, Denmark.—Yes, this Jewish question has caused me many a sleepless night, and still I see no way out. It seems to me absolutely unthinkable and inhuman that such things could be happening in our days. Especially, does it seem so to me personally, because since childhood and early youth and to this day, my dearest friends have been Jews. Praise the Lord, we here, in Denmark, do not know of a Jewish question. Our culture is on such a high level that no such deviation from it could ever be allowed.

All kinds of Jewish families apply to me who lost their position, means and everything else that makes life worth living, in Germany. They bring along their young, charming children with them. And I cannot help thinking: Is not the mere sight of these children sufficient to call a halt to all persecution? Their parents' faces are pale, their hands tremble, and their eyes are like wells filled with tears. And all one can do is to give shelter to some of them. They make me think of the war refugees. Innocent as they are of any wrongdoing, they are nevertheless being driver into exile.

Are Not All Men Brothers?

Of what avail is it if they are permitted to go abroad, if there is no work for them there? After all, are not all men brothers? Or do they actually believe in Germany, where most of the folks are pious and God-fearing, that the Almighty could have been so unjust that, once having brought people into the world, He would deny them a place under the sun and the right to live peacefully among their fellow-human beings? Why do not the Heavens open, so that the men and women of Germany hear once and for all, the Divine Voice explaining to them the error of their ways?

How is it possible to teach young National-Socialist children to grow up to follow the good life, never to cause any pain to plants or animals, while an ancient people is being treated, at the same time, so inhumanly? Oh, these young Jewish children! They keep asking their parents: "What have I done? What is wrong with us?"

This persecution of the Jews—I cannot think of any different name for it—seems to be as terrible for the "Aryan" children as it is for the Jewish youngsters, for harm is being done to the German "Aryan" younger generation which can never be undone in later life.

Submission Hard To Understand

It is strange, touching and moving that I have not observed to this day any of that sacred wrath among the Jewish refugees which would be so self-explanatory. They shrug their shoulders—and that is all. And these exiles, driven out of Germany, still love their native soil, the soil where their fathers and fathers' fathers lived and were laid to their eternal rest. And it is this very submission to fate that makes the whole situation for us, observers, so much more horrible, so much more difficult to understand.

Did I not witness with my own eyes during the War how it was invariably the Jews who would not procure meat and milk for their own children for fear of depriving other German children of these food products? Did I not witness how Jewish physicians lost their husbands and sons in the War, turn, with stoic calm and dignity, to nursing the sick and wounded? Without complaint and without any ado! Yes, I am deeply saddened because I know the Jews so well, because I love and admire them.

What else shall I say to you?

Hospitality was invariably a sacred custom with savage tribes. Neither culture, nor knowledge, nor religion was necessary to make them observe it. Where can we find that hospitality nowadays your home?"

which would say: "My home is No, I do not understand it all!

Jewish War Veteran Storekeepers May Accept Relief Cards

(Jewish Telegraphic Agency)

BERLIN, March 18.—Charity certificates issued to the unemployed poor and exchangeable at "Aryan" shops for shoes and clothing may henceforth also be exchanged at shops owned by Jewish war veterans, the Ministry of Economics announced yesterday.

The new ruling provides, however, that the Jewish shop owner must have suffered a sixty per cent injury in the War. This is generally taken to mean that the war veteran is minus two limbs.

The number of shops owned by Jewish veterans of this class is small, since most such men are unable to work.

Paris Students Protest Reich Refugee Tests

PARIS, March 18.—A sharp protest against the admission of German Jewish student refugees to final examinations here was submitted yesterday by a group of local law students, who believe that credit should not be given for studies pursued in Germany.

Warsaw Jewish Press Refuses German Ads

WARSAW, March 18.—In reprisal of the refusal by local German newspapers to accept Jewish advertising, the entire Jewish press of Warsaw is rejecting announcements by the German film company UFA.

Two of the company's films were shown here Friday night before empty houses, after an appeal by the anti-Hitler committee urging the theatre owners to withdraw the UFA films had failed.

Jennie Moscowitz in New Radio Drama

WHEN she was four years old, Jennie Moscowitz began her stage career in a company headed by the immortal Sarah Bernhardt. She has since given many noteworthy performances in "The Melting Pot"—1912, "The Auctioneer"—1914; "Potash and Perlmutter in Society"—1917, "Business Before Pleasure"—1921, "Kosher Kitty Kelly"—1925, and more recently as the mother opposite Paul Muni in "Counsellor at Law." After more than three score years, her star shines as brightly as of old. Jennie Moscowitz brings a vivid portrayal of the mother to the microphone in a new series of sketches titled "My Boy," by Allen Gordon, every Friday evening at 8:15 over station WEVD. In the supporting cast are Helene Dumes, Janet Richards and Mark Cassidy.

More folks will be able to hear WEVD programs since the Federal Radio Commission has granted this station an increase in power from 500 to 1,000 watts, effective last Friday.

Jewish News Review

Joshua Epstein provides an interesting review of Jewish news over station WMCA on Thursdays and Sundays at 7:15 p. m. There is an intriguing quality in his voice, which is natural and unforced. Epstein's material is well prepared and he holds his own with the better news commentators on the air. A versatile chap he is, for in addition to these broadcasts he writes original radio dramas and takes a hand at directly as well.

The Philharmonic Drive

It is no longer news that the Philharmonic programs over WABC and the Columbia network every Sunday at 3 are the most attractive musical fare on the air, particularly when the baton is in the hand of the famous Arturo Toscanini. If you haven't discovered these broadcasts, a treat is in store for you. A special broadcast celebrating the sixty-seventh birthday of Arturo Toscanini will be given by the New York Philharmonic - Symphony Orchestra next Sunday.

Toscanini himself will conduct, and the program will include the sonorous Brahms Symphony No. 2 in D major and Cesar Franck's immortal Symphony in D minor. . . A campaign for a sustaining fund of $500,000 for the Philharmonic is under way.

NRA on the Air

It is computed that President Roosevelt has made twenty-six radio appearances during his first year as the White House occupant. The President has added greatly to the popularity of this medium as a vehicle for public discussion. Following his lead, other public officials have enthusiastically entered the radio fold.

Another successful radio speaker in officialdom is Senator Clarence C. Dill, of Washington, who last week gave an interesting and clear account of the proposed communications legislation which will strengthen government control of telephone, telegraph and radio, as well as a picture of the vast untapped possibilities of radio.

A Youthful Trio

The youngest instrumental trio in the country will appear on the Curtis Institute of Music program over WABC and the Columbia network Thursday at 3:45. The members are Frederick Vogelgesang, thirteen-year-old violin student of Efrem Zimbalist; Sol Kaplan, fourteen-year-old pianist, who has given numerous recitals in New York and Philadelphia, and Samuel Houston Mayes, fifteen, who is a 'cello student of Felix Salmond. These youthful artists, known as the "Cherokee Trio," will play Beethoven's Trio in B-flat major, opus 11.

Muni Mentioned in Movie Award

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences which annually chooses the best picture, best actor and best-about-everything, announced its 1933 awards. Fittingly enough, the prize for the best actor was given to Charles Laughton, the Englishman, for his work in "The Private Life of Henry VIII." The runner-up was Paul Muni, cited for his fine portrayal of the victim in "I Am A Fugitive." Another Jewish gentleman who was honored was Walter Disney, whose animated cartoon "Three Little Pigs" was first choice.

For the sake of the record you should know that Katharine Hepburn was picked as the outstanding actress. "Cavalcade" won the palm for the best directed film and Sarah Mason and Victor Heerman received the prize for having done the best adaptation in making "Little Women" into a moving picture.

Anthony Adverse In Two Parts

Jake Wilk, head of the scenario department at Warner Brothers says that a violent argument is raging in his studio over the forthcoming production of "Anthony Adverse." Confronted with this 1,200 page tome, one of the parties at a conference jokingly suggested that the film version be made into two distinct pictures. The idea was taken seriously and now efforts are underway to adapt the book so that the result will be two pictures instead of one.

Nationalism And Opera

If you are an avid reader of the publicity material sent out by the various moving pictures companies you certainly receive a lot of strange and extraneous information. From Paramount Pictures came the following;

"Americans," according to Lanny Ross, a radio singer and actor, "are the only people who are says enough to tolerate or encourage opera in a foreign language." He adds that we should demand that all opera singers learn and use English when performing in the United States.

This is a very happy thought and worthy of a candidate for village dog-catcher. Such a strong nationalistic sentiment should not go unrewarded. Of course the fact that the lyrics of an opera must fit the music is of no importance to Mr. Ross, whose all consuming ambition is to "give a concert." That is, as soon as he considers himself sufficiently trained!

Remarks and Remarks

Some of the following examples will give you a rough idea of what the press departments of film companies send out for your edification and enjoyment. Not much of this stuff is printed in metropolitan papers but out in the sticks, I am told, our country cousins go for it in a big and hearty way.

"Bing Crosby chews two sticks of gum while singing." Which certainly explains a great deal.

"More than six months were spent on research and preparation by Cecil B. DeMille before he started actual production on 'Cleopatra'." Yes, and she'll probably turn up in the picture with a head of blond hair.

"Baby LeRoy, infant movie star, receives 500 fan letters a month." Fortunately the lad cannot read.

"Learning that she was to be shipwrecked on an island without benefit of shoes in scenes of 'We're Not Dressing,' Carole Lombard went and had her toes manicured." That should add realism to the film.

"Ida Lupino always sleeps with the covers pulled up off her feet." Leaving her in a ticklish situation.

"While dancing the 'Tequila' in 'Come On Marines,' Grace Bradley will wear a pair of black satin trousers laced down four inches apart on each side, a tiny black brassiere, and black gloves and sandals." What, no hat?

"One of the most difficult props to locate for 'Melody in Spring' was a herd of twenty-five cows which would permit themselves to be milked by an equal number of milking actors." Undoubtedly the cows had heard the actors sing.

News Reels

When you are in the Theatrical Belt and you have an hour to spare what do you do? My advice is to amble into the Embassy Theatre where the entire program is devoted to newsreels. If you want to get a real idea of what the people in this country believe in, think about and care for, watch these news reels.

The news reels have improved. They are no longer devoted exclusively to showing warships, airplanes and motorcycle races. If the producers ever get over the idea that all audiences have a mental age of six years, newsreels will be nearly perfect.

Keep up with Jewish news by reading the Jewish Daily Bulletin, only English-language Jewish daily newspaper.

SLANTS ON SPORTS

By MORRIS WEINER

Infield Play

We asked our chief at the city desk whether he would be willing to send us to Florida to cover the Jewish boys in big league baseball. He threw us out with a fast query, "Are there any?"

Quicker than a double play from Tinkers to Evers to Chance, we replied, "Sure there are! How about Jonah Goldman and Greenberg, the big guns of the Detroit club? Don't forget Al Cohen and Moe Rosenfeld of the Dodgers, and Buddy Meyers of the Senators. In case you haven't heard, Hank Leiber, that new kid with the Terrymen who was recruited from the Pacific Coast League, and Phil Weintraub, another Giant rookie, are slated for the majors.

"Let me remind you also, that McGraw was always on the lookout for a Jewish baseball player."

"Can't fool me," came the sage retort from the desk. "McGraw has been dead for a month. Talk about something lively in your column for a change."

We thought this speech was a low outside curve. At any rate it cut home. We walked over to the switchboard and pitched right into a conversation with the girl there.

Weintraub a Hard Hitter!

"What do you think of Phil Weintraub's chances to make the big time ball parks this season? You know, of course, that he's the fellow Bill Terry bought from the Birmingham club last September. Phil's a hard hitter and when he connects he swings from the heels. Not a fence buster naturally but I'm sure can lay it on to the old apple.

"Just the other day it was Phil's clout that gave the game to the Giants. He hit Dizzy Dean, of the Cards, for a triple, sending another man in to score. That's great stuff for a rookie in any man's league.

Started Playing in 1926

"Weintraub began playing baseball with the Evanstons, a Chicago semi-pro team, back in 1926. Later he signed up with the Rock Island club. It may be surprising to you but while Phil was on these teams he was a left-handed pitcher.

"During the following season he played for the Dubuque and Dayton outfits but he didn't get anywhere with these Central League clubs. It was this reason which made him give up baseball and go back to his wholesale meat business. But believe you me, once this baseball virus gets in your blood, you can't quit. Thus, the very next year he was holding down first base with another minor league team.

Becomes Outfielder

"In the middle of the '29 season he received a very bad arm injury. The medicos told him he'd never be able to play the national sport again. However, by careful and steady exercise, Phil brought his arm back to its one time form. For the next two years he knocked around from one club to another. Last season, however, he got a break with the Birmingham outfit. It was there that he began playing in the outfield, his present position with the Giants.

Room for Improvement

"Clyde Mylan, who knows the baseball business from the spikes upward, gave him a look. This former star of the Senators told Phil that it was a question of playing in the outfield or asking for handouts somewhere else. And it was chasing balls in the tall grass where Terry first saw him. If his fielding didn't seem so impressive to the young manager, a glance at his batting record would dispel such minor doubts. Last season Phil beaned the old apple for twenty-one doubles, ten triples and fifteen home runs.

"But Weintraub knows his fielding can be improved and says himself, 'I know I have a long distance to go but I picked up a lot last year. If I could work regularly at it, my fielding would improve. There hasn't been much wrong with my throwing as yet. And then again, I know I can hit in big league competition.'

O'Doul Has Edge

"Here's the catch. Terry still has such veterans as Mel Ott, Joe Moore and George Davis, still doing anything but picking daisies in the Giant outfield. O'Doul has the edge on Phil too. Through Weintraub can hit almost as good as Lefty, the latter is Terry's first reserve man because of his big league experience.

"However, the training and exhibition period runs another month before the managers have to decide upon whom they are going to keep on the payroll. We believe Phil will make the grade.

The Pay-Off

"Remember," we continued, "I haven't said a word about the crowd of Jewish baseball players we've got in the minors. Why, right here in the minor leagues of the east the boys are making splendid records for themselves. Look at Jack Grossman, with the Jersey City club, and George Weiss of the Newark Bears, and Max Posnack with the Birmingham team."

Speed Demons

Irving Jaffe, holder of most of the speed records for distances over the ice tracks, is breaking more world marks for steady nerves. He hasn't been so very active since he entered the professional skating ranks. However, Miss Kit Klein, one of this country's foremost woman skaters, is burning up the ice with new marks. She is leaving for Norway to compete with that nation's best speed demons in amateur competition.

We missed these two Jewish youngsters at the fancy skating carnival at the Garden last Wednesday night. Of all the talent displayed there no Jewish skater participated. We believe the following to be the reason. Jaffe and Miss Klein may hold most of the speed records between them but when it comes to fancy skating they cut no figure whatsoever.

More Maccabi Moves

We learn from the Maccabi Headquarters that this organization is going to concentrate in athletes 18 years and over. The purpose of this campaign is to start an elimination process for the second Maccabian team.

Leagues are forming in the following sports: tennis, boxing, swimming, wrestling, track and field. Meets will be held each month in various cities so that the coaches and trainers may get a slant on the prospective material for the coming games in April, 1935.

Members of the crack Maccabi team which scored a second place in international competition will act as coaches and trainers of the new enthusiasts. For further information write to David White, secretary U. S. M. Maccabi Association, 217 Broadway, New York City.

Jewish Athletes Will Compete This Week

National wrestling and handball championships of the Jewish Welfare Board will be decided next Saturday and sunday at the Ninety-second Street Y. M. H. A.

Teams representing Y. M. H. A.'s, and Jewish community centers from various parts of the country will compete for gold and silver medals. Attention has been called to the 1934 rules requiring contestants to be registered in the A. A. U. from their respective organizations

Co-Authors of Anti-War Play Receive Peace Plaque Award

Sklar and Maltz, Who Wrote 'Peace on Earth,' Are Young—Former's Father Was a Munitions Worker

By HARRIET STRACHSTEIN

George Sklar and Albert Maltz, co-authors of "Peace on Earth," which has just completed a sixteen-weeks' run at the Civic Repertory Theater, were awarded the Annie E. Gray peace plaque last night at the New School for Social Research. This is the first annual award for the "outstanding American work of art, contributing most to the cause of peace."

It is ironic fate that singles out the son of a munitions worker as an advocate against war. Such is George Sklar. In his ramshackle, back stage office yesterday, he spoke both for himself and for his collaborator, Albert Maltz.

Sklar is an exceedingly earnest young man. He is twenty-five years old, and so is Maltz. He talks quickly, intelligently; and has the conscientious, studious appearance of a school teacher. Considering that his original aim was for that profession, this is not so strange.

Both College Men

He graduated from Yale with a B. A. degree. Albert Maltz emerged from Columbia with a PhD. Both met at the Baker Dramatic School where they wrote and produced "Merry-Go-Round," a vitriolic dig at Tammany. It was presented simultaneously at the Baker School and on Broadway. So successfully was it received, that with this proof that "two heads are better than one," they set about planning another play.

The restless and threatening situation throughout the world at present gave them the idea for an anti-war drama.

"We looked up old newspaper files, dealing with the hysterical times just before 1917. There we found all the material we needed," said Sklar. "I felt that since the working classes are the ones who suffer principally from the effects of war, it should be they who should occupy the center of the stage in our play. Coming from a worker's family myself, I understood their viewpoint perfectly.

"It would have been foolish, though, to make our hero either a worker or a radical. No audience would have responded seriously to the opinions of such a protagonist. So we chose a professor as a more likely and impressive hero.

Called Propagandists

"The critics certainly lammed into us when the play first opened," continued Sklar ruefully. "They called us hysterical and propagandists. An ordinary Broadway production would have died under such a lashing in three days. It was only through our alliance with the Theater Union, which exists principally on contributions from the working classes, that we could continue. Their loyalty sustained us.

"Imagine," he declared warmly, "the unions organized one hundred and fifty benefits in our theater, in order to keep the play going. Later, we found it easier sailing. The uptown groups began to drop in, and the critics fell in line too."

When asked about producing a play around the Jewish problem, he answered:

"We have had several such plays submitted to the Theater Union, where we serve on the executive board, but have found none quite up to the mark. A play like that needs expert handling. I feel that the Jewish question is a labor question—not a question in itself. The answer lies only in international working class unity."

VIENNA, March 18.—Hakoah, the oldest Jewish sports organization in this country, celebrated its twenty-fifth birthday this week.

More recently the Austrian Hakoah has been distinguished by its progress in swimming and light athletics.

laugh too, we know what a contagious laughter he has," she declared. Mrs. Kohut spoke with deep feeling.

Dr. Wise, in his response, spoke of his friends, teachers, comrades, and immediate family. He described the causes for which he has fought, declaring "a man who is dumb would have some degree of eloquence for the causes for which I have struggled."

"Up to January, 1933," he continued, "I believed that we were at the dawn of a new world, of a world of peace. And now I found myself baffled, though not without hope, in the face of a world in which there is the possibility of a greater war than that of 1914." The very last words that he would speak, he asserted, would be "a word of warning that Hitlerism means war, that the world will have to choose between Hitlerism —war—the shattering of humanity, on one hand, and freedom and world peace on the other."

He summarized his career in the single sentence: "I have spoken the truth as I have seen it."

an Easter military concert in the Turnhalle at Lexington avenue and 85th street on April 1, and another meeting in Ridgewood Grove on April 8.

Invitations to the second affair were printed on brown leaflets which announced: "German Americans Turn Out For the Mass Protest Meeting Against the Unconstitutional Jewish Boycott."

Approximately fifty guards dressed in the regulation uniform of the SS, or higher grade storm troops, attended the meeting on Saturday to preserve order. They wore white, rather than brown, shirts, the only mark that distinguished them from the Reich variety of storm trooper. They were clad in black military trousers, white shirts, black ties, "Sam Brown" belts and leather shoulder straps, and on their arms were bands of black, white, and red with a circular swastika emblem. They and other civilians wore the Friends of New Germany emblem, the swastika superimposed on the American shield.

Hitlerite Youths Present

Hitlerite youths were there in numbers. Boys from six to sixteen wore the regulation uniform of the Hitlerjugend, brown shirts, brown shorts, and the black neckerchief of the group. A few of them sold the Nazi weekly organ, the Deutsche Zeitung.

The background of the stage was draped with a large swastika in the center with the American and German monarchical flags on either side. The swastika hung from the rafters and was draped around the balconies.

A dozen storm troopers were lined up in front of the stage, where they stood at attention during the entire proceedings. Others throughout the audience continually demanded, "Order!" to hush those who whispered too loud. A few of the storm troopers, apparently, spoke in English, while from the accents of the rest, all seemed imported.

The climax of the evening came when, with the audience hushed into absolute silence, a squad of Steel Helmet members in the gray-green uniforms of "front-fighters" marched into the auditorium. They halted, left-faced, clicked their heels and with fife and drum accompanied the Steel Helmet band on the stage in martial airs. The piece finished, the audience remained in utter silence.

Demands Boycott of Jews

Suddenly from the wings, Fritz Gissibl, national Nazi commander, strode upon the stage. With hands on hips, he spoke for less than five minutes. He called upon the audience to join the Friends of New Germany Movement and support the organization in all its activities. He demanded that they "boycott the Jewish boycotters," and he said that in year, to come America would thank them for making America, like Germany, pure of Jews.

Winterscheidt, in an equally brief address, called upon the women to buy no more from Jewish business concerns. He begged them to patronize German stores handling goods made in Germany. He warned them that their "Jewish economic masters" were seeking the impoverishment of all German Americans, and called upon everyone present to pay his initiation fee of one dollar to support the active fight of the Friends of New Germany against American Jewry.

The orchestra struck up "Deutschland Ueber Alles." A dozen hands throughout the audience was raised in the Hitler salute. After one verse it swung into the Horstwessel Lied, the Hitlerite marching anthem, and half the audience saluted. When the band began the fourth and last verse of the song, every hand in the house (with one exception) was raised. And as the music mounted higher in the closing bars, Nazis besought a unanimous salute to Hitler. "Hoch mit den Haenden," they urged.

Macy Action on Boycott Is Hailed

a factor which "retarded for six months" reprisal against Hitler, the Non-Sectarian anti-Nazi League yesterday greeted Macy's stand with satisfaction but with expressions of regret that the action was so long postponed.

"It is better late than never," observed Ezekiel Rabinowitz, secretary of the league. "But R. H. Macy and Company," he added, "has retarded for six months the fight of the civilized world against a government which ran amuck and which is destroying the very fundamentals of that liberty which civilization has achieved through centuries of sacrifice."

Rabinowitz referred to the "lukewarm" attitude which Macy's took toward the boycott of German goods at a time when a declaration of boycott might have served as example to other department stores.

"As far back as September 18 of last year," he said, "the leading retail stores gathered in conference at the request of Samuel Untermyer, who demanded that the interests of humanity be placed above selfish business interests. He asked the retail stores to declare collectively a boycott against German goods to be effective so long as Nazi atrocities continue.

"Now it can be told," Rabinowitz declared. "Were it not for Macy's attitude, the appeal would have received unanimous response at the time.

"The very reasons which Macy's now advance as the cause for closing its Berlin office had been brought forward at that meeting. As a matter of fact, such prominent department stores as Lord and Taylor and James McCreery and Company discontinued buying German merchandise almost a year ago."

"The Committee of Ten has had prepared the enclosed pamphlet, "Asylum for Refugees Under Our Immigration Laws," containing the views of distinguished contemporaries on this timely subject.

their role in international diplomacy, is not pro-Jewish but pro-Rothschild propaganda.

But if the greater part of this film is devoted to an idealization of the Rothschilds, the opening scenes of the home life of the elder Rothschild in the Frankfurt Ghetto will hardly please either the Rothschilds, or the Jews in general, for they bring out the shadier side of the founder of the Rothschild "dynasty," showing his shrewdness and trickiness, his readiness to cheat the tax collector, even though the unspeakable Ghetto disabilities and the unscrupulousness of the oppressors of the Jews may have justified Mayer Rothschild's shortcomings. If Mayer Rothschild is portrayed faithfully in the early scenes of the film, his dying words to his five sons "to trade with dignity, to live with dignity and to walk the world with dignity" sound unconvincing, incredible. For these five sons, who lived with their father, witnessed that he himself did not trade with dignity and did not walk the world with dignity.

As a vehicle for George Arliss, "The House of Rothschild" is effective. He achieves in it a real triumph. As a pro-Jewish propaganda film, it is a failure. The exaggerations of the power of the Rothschilds in international diplomacy may be construed by the anti-Semites as confirmation of the mythical, forged "Protocols of the Elders of Zion." The unsympathetic earlier scenes will surely appeal to the enemies of the Jews.

The producers undoubtedly had good intentions. They tried to produce a successful film, which would at the same time help to combat anti-Jewish prejudice. A little better judgment and discretion in the use of the material could have accomplished this result.

Macy's

The announcement made by R. H. Macy and Company to the effect that instructions had been cabled to close its Berlin offices cannot fail to produce a favorable impression upon all who abhor the Hitler regime of bigotry and persecution. The explanation given for this move is that "consumer resistance to goods of German origin is responsible for the closing of the Berlin office" and that "the successful search for merchandise which would not meet with consumer resistance has made it possible to replace German products in almost every instance."

Mr. Percy S. Straus, president of Macy's, is to be commended for having made this decision on the eve of the projected intensified anti-Jewish boycott in Germany. Even though Macy's purchases in Germany during the past year were reduced to an insignificant minimum, according to the statement of R. H. Macy and Company in the Jewish Daily Bulletin, the closing of the purchasing bureau in Berlin and the establishment of a new office in its place in Prague, will bring home to the Hitler government and to the German merchants the extent of American consumer resistance to goods of German origin and the power of public opinion in the United States.

Macy's withdrawal from Germany is more than a mere gesture, even though it is belated. It is an unmistakable proof of the temper and attitude of enlightened public sentiment toward Nazi Germany.

The German merchants and industrialists are paying ever more heavily for the continuous crimes of the Hitler regime. Germany's economic structure is being undermined by the arrogance, bigotry, cruelty and folly of the Nazi rulers.

Macy's reason for closing its Berlin office will give no comfort to the Hitler government. It cannot be explained away in Germany as a sentimental endorsement of the anti-German boycott by a Jewish-owned department store in America. The truthful reason given by Macy's hits the Nazis very hard, for it makes it clear that the Berlin purchasing office of the largest department store was closed not only because of consumer resistance to German-made goods but also because German goods can not be replaced by merchandise produced elsewhere.

The German people will feel the effects of Hitler's criminal blunders for generations to come.

He told friends that he considered it his duty to return and share the fate of his Socialist comrades.

Exceptions Not the Rule

"Perhaps local conditions vary and there are isolated examples of Jews whose business was not seriously damaged and whose circumstances are relatively prosperous," he continued, "but these are the exceptions, not the rule."

"If anything we say or do here may have little effect on Germany, we must however ensure that public opinion outside Germany be informed of the true nature of the Jewish persecution. We ask nothing except what Germany is asking for herself, equal treatment.

"Whether the 'Aryan' paragraph remains one year or ten, whether we or our children see it expunged we shall never swerve from our demand that neither race, religion nor origin be a bar to professional work or public office," he concluded.
