Zionists, JDC To Carry On United Drive

Agreement Disclosed in Berlin by Agency Executive

(Jewish Telegraphic Agency)
BERLIN, Jan. 25.—An agreement between the Joint Distribution Committee and the Zionist Organization of America, to carry out jointly the present year's drive for funds under the United Jewish Appeal, has been reached by these two institutions, it was disclosed here today by Dr. Georg Landauer, secretary of the Jewish Agency's office for the settlement of German Jews in Palestine, who reached Berlin on his way to Palestine from America.

Dr. Landauer also disclosed the fact that the allocations committee of the United Jewish Appeal in America has fixed the sum of $250,000 for settling German Jews in Palestine.

Explains Visit to U. S.
"The purpose of my visit to America," Dr. Landauer stated, "was to negotiate with the allocations committee of the United Jewish Appeal with regard to the participation in the work of settling German Jews in Palestine. Secondly, to conclude an agreement with regard to a new drive, and thirdly to report to the Administrative Committee of the Jewish Agency on the progress and the results of the settlement work in Palestine."

Greek Jews Ask Minister To Quiz Threat

Merchants Are Receiving Notes to Cease All Trade Activities

(Jewish Telegraphic Agency)
ATHENS, Jan. 25.—A delegation consisting of the president and vice-president of the Jewish community of Athens appeared today before the Greek Minister of the Interior, asking for an inquiry into the existence of a secret anti-Jewish organization which is sending threatening letters to Jewish merchants urging them to liquidate their businesses.

The Minister assured the delegation he would order a prompt investigation into the matter and instruct that members of the organization be severely punished.

The delegation also gave to the Minister a number of anti-Jewish leaflets distributed by unknown parties all over Athens, calling upon the population to boycott Jewish stores. The leaflets, with the threatening letters, were handed over to the State Attorney by the Minister for investigation and prosecution of the guilty parties.

Religious Edict Averts Duel Between Leaders

(Jewish Telegraphic Agency)
WARSAW, Jan. 25.—A duel between an orthodox Jewish member of the Polish parliament and a Zionist member of the Warsaw municipal council was averted here today because the Jewish religion prohibits dueling.

Deputy L. Minzberg, leader of the Agudath Israel, orthodox party, was challenged by Dr. Kraus, Zionist alderman and president of the Executive of the Jewish Artisans Association, for an allegedly insulting remark made by the parliamentarian reflecting against Dr. Kraus.

Deputy Minzberg refused to accept the challenge, suggesting other means of settling the incident.

Jabotinsky Arrives to Present 'Point of View' to Americans

Revisionists' Leader Is Greeted Enthusiastically by Followers

By ADRIAN J. BERKOWITZ
As Vladimir Jabotinsky, world Revisionist leader, stepped off the gangplank of the S.S. Manhattan Friday, hero-worshipping young Brith Trumpeldorites rushed up to him and kissed his hand.

"Tel Hai!" The Brith Trumpeldor greeting, a memorial to the death of Joseph Trumpeldor during his defense of the Galilee colony, rang through the air—the first words Jabotinsky heard after he had stepped onto American soil.

More than 100 members of Brith Trumpeldor and of YZRO, the Youth Zionist Revisionist Organization, were at the pier to (Continued on Page Twelve)

Laborers Get Jobs in Haifa After Landing

Salonica Stevedores Put to Work Immediately Upon Arrival

(Jewish Telegraphic Agency)
HAIFA, Jan. 25.—So great is the lack of laborers in the Haifa port that a number of stevedores who arrived today from Salonica were snatched up for employment in the harbor area as soon as they had landed.

Despite the fact that 2,000 men are now working at the port there is still a labor scarcity. There are 300 Jews among the workers, but most of the laborers are Arabs from Syria. Among them are numerous children.

The stevedores work in day and night shifts and yet find it impossible to keep pace with the volume of work. Another twenty Jewish laborers are expected to arrive from Poland this month.

Rabbi Rescinds His Resignation From Mizrachi

Berlin Had Announced Withdrawal From Executive

JERUSALEM, Jan. 25.—Rabbi Meir Berlin, founder and honorary president of the World Mizrachi, orthodox Zionist group, today withdrew his resignation as a member of the Mizrachi World Executive, submitted one week ago. Rabbi Berlin declared he had reconciled his differences with the executive and would resume his membership.

At the same time a committee composed of the various groups within the Mizrachi was organized and empowered to decide upon all questions concerning organizational matters.

The committee includes Chief Rabbi Ben Zion Uziel and Dr. Pinkas of the Palestine Mizrachi; Rabbi Jacob Berman of the Mizrachi Havatik, and Moshe Shapiro and Dr. Gottesdiener of the Hapoel Hamizrachi.

French Warn of Extreme Step In Paris Appeal

Fear-Stricken Populace Seeks Escape, Aid Group Reports

(Jewish Telegraphic Agency)
PARIS, Jan. 25.—A warning to the world that the entire Jewish population of the Saar will be placed in a concentration camp established at Neunkirchen, North-east of Saarbruecken, by the Nazi government, was issued in an appeal here today by the Association to Help the Saar Victims, formed by leading personalities and scientists of France and headed by M. Andre Fribourg, a member of the French parliament.

"Though the formation of such a camp is contradictory to the agreement between the League of Nations and Germany, the first inmates of this camp will include, among others, a hundred Catholic clergymen and some Jews, the appeal states.

Personalities on Committee
The Association, in whose name the appeal was issued, includes on its committee sixteen French Senators and twenty Deputies. The Association has undertaken to care, among others, for the Jewish refugees from the Saar, whom the committee estimates at about 6,000 persons.

"It is not astonishing," the appeal continues, "that the fear-stricken population of the Saar district, especially the Jews, contemplate to leave home, house and fatherland in order to escape from revenge, imprisonment, scenes of terror within the concentration camp and perhaps even from death. But where shall they go? It is (Continued on Page Twelve)

Palestine Labor Movement Backed By 241 Reform Rabbis of Country

Express 'Agreement With Principles, Ideals' of Efforts

A statement endorsing the Palestine labor movement, signed by 241 Reform rabbis of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, was made public Friday by Rabbi Edward L. Israel of Baltimore, chairman of the committee under whose auspices the statement was revealed.

Members of the committee include Rabbi Philip S. Bernstein of Rochester, N. Y.; A. J. Feldman of Hartford, Conn.; Nelson Glueck of Hebrew Union College, Cincinnati; James G. Heller of Cincinnati; Morris S. Lazaron of Baltimore; Dr. Felix A. Levy of Chicago; Dr. Jacob R. Marcus of Hebrew Union College, and Dr. Abba Hillel Silver of Cleveland.

The statement follows:

Views as Individuals

"We, the undersigned rabbis holding membership in the Central Conference of American Rabbis, but stating our views in this resolution as individuals, desire to express our agreement with the principles and ideals of the Palestine labor movement.

"We believe that the prophetic ideals espoused by Liberal Judaism are especially compatible with those of the labor movement in Eretz Israel. In the complex society of our day it may be more difficult to see its application, but the ancient maxim 'Zion bemishpat tipadeh,' 'Zion can be redeemed only through justice,' seems to us as profoundly true as of old.

"The purpose of this endorse-

RABBI M. S. LAZARON

ment is not to place our stamp of approval upon every phase or aspect of the labor movement, but to express our agreement with its principles. Labor Palestine strives to build a cooperative rather than a competitive society in the land of our fathers. Its aim is to avoid erecting another social structure resting upon the sands of injustice and inequality. Its purpose is to appraise economic endeavor by the rule of service to the community rather than private profit. It seeks to secure a decent living standard for all workers.

"It underlines the importance of the welfare of the many rather than the luxury of the few. It stands upon the principle of the right of labor to bargain collectively. It opposes those who would destroy the very foundation of the Yishtub by using cheap labor and exploiting it, rather than paying a living wage to fellow Jews.

Seeks Wider Entry

"It is engaged in the effort to widen the entry into Palestine for labor, and to rehabilitate the middle class and direct it toward fundamentally productive channels of work. It is endeavoring to foster a communal consciousness and communal unity among the Jews of Palestine. And, finally, it is resisting the many who would make Jewish Palestine only another land for the exploitation of the weak, for the building up of a society based upon economic injustice.

"This program of the Histadruth in Palestine, and the League for Labor Palestine in America, seems to us to be as one with the essential principles of prophetic idealism. Many of its economic aims are part of the social justice program of the Central Conference of American Rabbis.

"We conclude, therefore, with the declaration that, as we see it, Liberal Judaism, in addition to its general sympathy with the rehabilitation of Palestine as the Jewish homeland, should feel an especial enthusiasm for labor Palestine. We commend to our colleagues and to our followers hearty support for the Histadruth and the League for Labor Palestine."

New York delegates to the National Labor Convention for Jewish Workers in Palestine, which met last month, will gather in a special session Sunday afternoon in the main ballroom of the Hotel Pennsylvania, it was announced Friday.

Prominent speakers representing various trade unions and labor organizations will greet the delegates and speak on the situation in Palestine, with emphasis placed on the work of the Histadruth.

In addition, various plans are expected to be proposed for raising $250,000, fixed as the quota of the National Labor Committee. Of this sum New York's assessment is $100,000.

R. D. B. Speaks

The Delectable Goebbels

The delectable Doctor Goebbels, who is proving daily that psychology is a thing of which the Germans are ridiculously ignorant, has now come out with another book to prove that God has definitely decided to make the Germans his chosen people. The astounding propaganda minister is certainly an industrious person and to his industry he manages to add a capacity for self-deception which is passed on to the gullible German people. The book is now published in England and no doubt in America as well. It is an admixture of impudent claims, distorted fact and nauseous hypocrisy and it is written in diary form under the title of "My Part in Germany's Fight."

This is the so-called "statesman" who manages successfully to keep the entire German nation in a state of ignorance as to the opinions of the outside world. The English press, for instance, which does not disguise its contempt for the camarilla, is constantly penalized by Goebbels' orders of suppression. The Times is confiscated at the newsstands today; the Morning post tomorrow, and the Telegraph thereafter. A goodly number of papers manage to slip through the cordon but the Germans have become listless, like the Russians, and no longer read papers. If they do they merely peruse the official "dope" bulletins which are sent out by authority. Gradually the old and reliable German newspapers are going out of business. Those that remain are not worth looking at.

My friend Lord Rothermere, the principal proprietor of the vastly circulated Daily Mail, has a flair for stepping in to champion causes that are not too popular in England. He made a most heroic attempt to bring Hungary's claims and aspirations so far to the front as to make them matters of first rate international concern. He did it so effectively in his usual thorough manner that the Hungarians threw hats into the air and even talked of offering him the crown of the monarchy; after which the noble Viscount thought better of it.

Next he discovered Sir Oswald Mosley who had begun to look insecure on his tight rope. The Daily Mail picked up Mosley and boomed him. It looked good for Mosley's brand of Fascism. Then suddenly, without warning, the Daily Mail's spotlight was withdrawn from the noble features of the English Fuehrer, and Mosley has once more to rely on police court scenes for his wider publicity.

Next, my lord of Rothermere, quixotic to a degree, goes over to Berlin and finds that Hitler ist der Mann. Heaven - sensu, soft-voiced, single-minded; that Germany has found her feet, and that Great Britain and Germany must be friends. Why not a rapprochement between these two noble peoples? On the same day an English lady, entering a Jewish shop in Frankfurt, was stopped by one of the Hitler supermen on picket duty to prevent God's "Aryans" from polluting themselves by buying from Jews. The lady paid no attention and the little gentleman spat in her face! That youth stands a good chance of becoming a Storm Troop leader.

Meanwhile, the delectable Doctor Goebbels sends out propaganda messages that Germany is learning to do without the raw material that she cannot buy from abroad owing to the world's disapproval of her methods. If that were true, it would be quite satisfactory to the rest of the world which does not agree that the German brand of "Aryanism" is of much account, if any.

If and when the adventurers are deposed or see sense, then the world will be glad to readmit poor doped Germany into the circle. Not before.

As for the Jewish question, I fear it cannot be settled without some more application of the screws.

Jewish Physician, Nazi Voter, Arrives Here After Saar Junket

New Yorkers were speculating Friday over the identity of a renegade local Jewish physician who allowed a "German patriotic society" to pay the expense of his return to his native Saar so that he might vote in favor of handing the area over to the Reich.

Reporters who met the Europa, which arrived here with the first of the American citizens who took advantage of a provision which allowed everyone who resided in the Saar as recently as 1919 to vote in the plebiscite, tried to confirm the doctor's name but were unsuccessful.

Terrified when a photographer who recognized him attempted to take his picture, the man pulled his collar over his face, ran down three decks and lost himself in the crowd. He was heard to whine that his practice in New York would be ruined if his picture were printed in the newspapers.

The physician was one of twenty-seven who returned from the Saar aboard the Europa. All feared to be photographed, none would reveal his residence address and only a few would even give their last names. The returning voyagers were universally afraid of the effect publicity would have on their economic futures in this country.

Briton Warns Reich of Acts In Saar Basin

Urges Humane Treatment of Minorities to Forestall Censure

(Jewish Telegraphic Agency) LONDON. — Herbert Morrison, Laborite leader who is frequently mentioned as a likely choice for Premier the next time a Labor government is formed, warned Germany in a speech that its victory in the Saar plebiscite will hurt the standing of the Reich "unless the Nazis are humane and sensible in their treatment of the Saar minority."

"They may find that their victory will lower the standard of Germany before world opinion rather than elevate it," he declared.

"In any case, if the Saar is returned to Germany it removes one of the greatest grievances of Germany against the Treaty of Versailles," he said.

Check Nazi Success "It may possibly check the success of the Nazis trading on that sense of injustice against the rest of the world felt by the German people.

"If, however, the German government does the wise and decent thing and recognizes the humane and civic rights of the Saarland minority, it must logically do the same for the trade unionists, Co-operators, Socialists, Communists and Jews of the Reich itself.

"I do not believe that the German government fully appreciates the disgust felt by world opinion against the terrorism and tyranny of the Nazi regime.

Lift Terrorism

"One finds it difficult to appeal to the members of the German government and the Nazi party in view of their general temper, but I would submit to them that they would be rendering an enormous service to the good name of Germany, with which country we all want to be friends, if they were to celebrate their Saar victory by lifting the terrorism, stopping the tyranny, and restoring the political and industrial rights of the masses.

"They would receive an enthusiastic and kindly response from world opinion that would bring even greater joy to the heart of Germany than the victory of the Saar plebiscite.

"Although any appeal to the present regime in Germany is difficult, I would beg of them to think about it."

Rabbis and Socialists

The endorsement with the 241 Reform rabbis signed in favor of the Palestine Labor Movement will no doubt meet with a storm of protest on the part of many.

The Palestine Labor Party as a Socialist Party is anti-religious in spirit. Only recently one of its leaders demonstratively refused to take the oath in court on the Bible. The schools maintained by the Labor Party in Palestine are definitely atheistic. The children there are taught that religion is opium for the people.

How can rabbis endorse such a party? Is there a single rabbi in Palestine who would endorse this party? Are the Reform rabbis of America interested in preserving religion or do they want to play socialist by proxy? Do not the rabbis understand that if the viewpoint of the Histadruth should obtain throughout the entire Jewish world there would be no synagogues and rabbis?

The rabbis who signed the endorsement for the Socialist Labor Party of Palestine, if they are consistent, would have to join the Socialist Party of America. One cannot endorse Socialism in one country and refuse to endorse it in another. Or, do these rabbis think that the socialist ideas of the Histadruth in Palestine are different than the ones preached by Norman Thomas in America?

Any impartial Jew, who has visited Palestine recently, was unpleasantly struck by the class warfare now going on between the Histadruth and the other elements of the Yishuv. By endorsing class warfare in Palestine, which no Zionist would like to encourage. Do the rabbis believe that the ideas of social justice are a monopoly of the Histadruth? Did not the Bible thousands of years before Socialism came into existence give profound expression to the ideals of social justice?

Our American rabbis, by injecting themselves into the political struggle which is being waged between various parties in the Zionist Movement, are only acting against the interests of Palestine. To strengthen the group of General Zionists, to make it possible for them to maintain equilibrium between the various contending factions, is today the aim of many Zionists

A WEEK'S EVENTS IN REVIEW

By BORIS SMOLAR

The official announcement which Louis T. McFadden made this week, informing the United States that he intends to run as a candidate for President in 1936 on a purely anti-Jewish platform, will not shock the Jews, though it will require more concentration on the part of Jewish leaders to combat Mr. McFadden's anti-Semitic propaganda.

It is quite clear that the Congressman who was defeated in his own State of Pennsylvania after serving ten terms in Congress, stands very little chance of being elected President. From this viewpoint the announcement of Mr. McFadden can be considered merely a joke.

There is, however, no doubt that in choosing to run for President, Mr. McFadden is backed by certain forces that will finance his campaign. And this is something to which serious attention ought to be paid by Jewish organizations in America. The anti-Semitic campaign around McFadden's candidacy is more to be feared than the candidacy itself.

Jews Have Personal Interest in Campaign

Always keenly interested in the Presidential campaign, American Jews this time, due to McFadden's anti-Semitic ambitions, will have to be interested in the election also as Jews. Once one the Presidential candidates runs on an anti-Jewish platform, it is only natural that the Jews should be interested in defeating him personally and in counteracting his propaganda campaign.

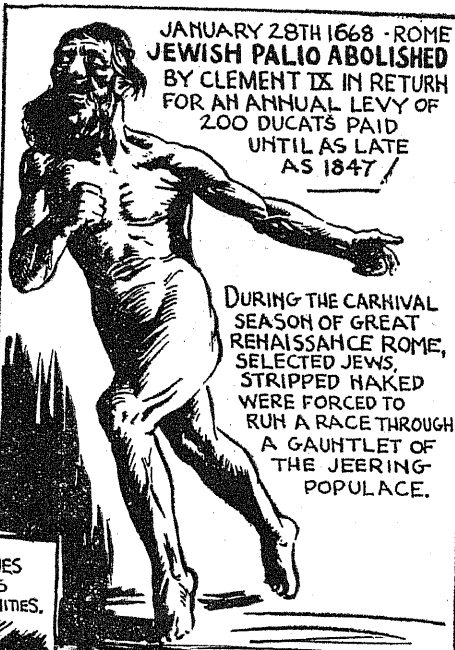

It is for this reason that, in the forthcoming Presidential campaign, Jewish activities will have to assume an unprecedented aspect. Making, till now, no distinction between one political party and another, the Jews of America now definitely will have to unite for an open fight against a definite party.

The Independent Republican party which announced McFadden as its Presidential candidate is in no way connected with the real Republican party. The name of the new party is, however, misleading and may be confused by many with the regular Republican party. The latter, therefore, will have to disassociate itself openly from McFadden's group.

What Bulletin Readers Say

Wanted—A Speaker

To the Editor, Jewish Daily Bulletin:
My husband and I are avid readers of your grand little paper and we feel that if more Jews, young or old, read it too they would have a clearer idea of the world in which the Jew lives in today. We are both wishing you continued good luck and success.

The other reason that I am writing you is this. I wonder whether you could advise me in this matter. Three months ago (October 8) I organized a women's club to help out a synagogue and also do welfare work in the community. We had a great number of young girls and they wanted to turn this club into a young folks league. We did that and a number of very fine young men joined up with us.

On October 8 we had fourteen members. Today we have about 140. Grand, isn't it? These young people want to be entertained and we as officers (I am vice-president) cudgel our brains to get the right type of entertainment that will be both enjoyable and yet teach us something too. Where could I get in touch with a speaker's bureau? Men of prominence who can really speak and tell us things that we would remember.

Our president was fortunate to who wish unity within the Zionist Movement.

The ideal of social justice is the ideal of most of the General Zionists as well as the Laborites. To endorse the Laborites alone will result in a widening of the split in the Zionist Movement rather than in consolidating the Movement.

get Dr. Price for us and I noticed everyone sat tense while he spoke. His topic was "Try Religion." That's what I mean. English speaking men who know their topics and can hold a young audience. Please, answer this, and try to help us. Will you? We can't pay anything so perhaps you won't think much of this now—but we are going to hope for a reply.

The name of our club is The Young Folks League of Ein Jacob, 1426 Minford place, Bronx.

Hauptmann Case

To the Editor, Jewish Daily Bulletin:
According to the "Manchester Guardian Weekly" of January 4th, Hauptmann is being defended by an array of counsel who are reported to have been retained by him through funds raised among German-Americans, Hauptmann having been mildly active in the pro-Nazi agitation in New York. If this is true, why hasn't the press of the United States commented upon it?

Publicize McFadden

To the Editor, Jewish Daily Bulletin:
The announcement in your paper that former Congressman Louis T. McFadden, rabid anti-Semite, has launched a campaign for the presidency of the United States should provoke considerable thought on the part of that portion of the public which is interested in the future of Jewry in this country.

The fact that this man, whose virulent attacks on Jews have been printed in the Congressional Record at public expense, has the audacity to aim for the highest office in the land while flaunting so madly bigoted a program, should not be taken lightly. It is, of course, doubtful as to how far his efforts will get him. But, although he may accomplish nothing toward attaining his ambitious goal, it is obvious that he and his group, unless promptly crushed can work incomparable harm among the gullible part of the public.

I was surprised that the general press carried no notice at all of his announced intentions. It may be that they are skeptical of the man's ability to do any damage and that they are not desirous of giving him any publicity that may possibly help him in any way. It is at times like this that I value your publication more than ever. Not giving them publicity is not the proper method, I believe, of eliminating them as malign influences. Bring them and their nefarious doings into the light—the quicker the better for all concerned.

Decries Lack of Unity

To the Editor, Jewish Daily Bulletin:
Isn't it a shame that Jews can't work with each other?

These calls to "unity of action" ring with peculiar emptiness in the face of such situations as that now existent in Jerusalem, where six Jewish aldermen can't get together over a Jewish vice-mayor.

What right have Jews to the respect of non-Jews when they don't seem to respect each other?

as being in the Mayflower Hotel in Washington—the same hotel where the huge Jewish gathering for Palestine took place last Sunday and Monday.

This pro-Palestine gathering, which was addressed not only by Zionists but also by non-Zionists, can be considered one of the historic events in the life of American Jewry. It was attended by the most representative leaders of American Jewish organizations and it echoed the sentiments of American Jews when it decided to establish an American commission to coordinate the activities of all public and private agencies engaged in the United States in economic work for Palestine.

Such a commission has long been necessary, not only for America, but for all countries where funds are collected for Palestine. A well-planned economy for the development of Jewish national interests in Palestine is possible only when plans are concentrated in the hands of one group and not when dozens of differing bodies and hundreds of private individuals are competing. Such a well-planned economic system for Palestine is especially necessary now, when speculation there has assumed dangerous proportions.

Americas' Contribution To the Holy Land

It was reported at the Washington conference that American Jews have contributed $13,000,000 towards the total of $25,000,000 collected for various reconstruction purposes. This was exclusive of funds expended by the Jewish National Fund for the purchase of land as the inalienable property of the Jewish people.

The large sum of money contributed by American Jewry discloses how important a factor they were in the upbuilding of Palestine, though at present they do not play so important a role.

With their eyes on the Washington conference, Jews in America this week also watched very closely developments concerning the crisis in the new Jerusalem municipal council. The crisis arose when certain Jewish organizations in Palestine objected to the government's appointment of Daniel Auster, vice-mayor of Jerusalem, without previously consulting the Jewish National Council of Palestine.

Mr. Auster is a General Zionist and a well-known figure in the Jewish community of Jerusalem. Opposition demanded, however, that the government appoint as vice-mayor Haim Solomon, another of the newly-elected Jewish members of the municipal council.

Split Assumed Serious Proportions

Supported by the General Zionists and the Sephardic community, and especially by M. M. Ussishkin, Mr. Auster refused to resign from the vice-mayorship. A split among the six Jewish aldermen was thus caused, three of them siding with Auster, the other three with his opponent.

This split reached such proportions that the Sephardic community was prepared to withdraw its representative from the Jewish National Council. It prevented the High Commissioner from participating in the inauguration ceremony of the municipal body. It was finally settled in favor of Mr. Auster, who will be the first Jewish vice-mayor ever appointed in Jerusalem.

By EUGENE LYONS

The long ordeal of Jacob Haimovich, Soviet citizen, puts the saga of Job in the shade. Every new drive against "former people," boorzhooys, lishentzi, nepmen and speculators, was tried first, it would seem, upon Jacob Haimovich. He had been fashioned by birth, instinct and hard luck into the perfect scapegoat for the new revolutionary regime. The son of rich parents, with a natural propensity for private trading that can be curbed by no threats and dangers, he has been repeatedly arrested, driven from jobs, ousted from his room, manhandled by the G.P.U. on suspicion of possessing "valuta."

But somehow he has survived. Always he was released in time for the next arrest or perquisition. And in the end, at least when I saw him last, he had squirmed into a job as third assistant director of a government trading trust. He was no longer Jacob Haimovich, but Comrade Rubinstein if you please.

EUGENE LYONS

Well, in Leningrad one day I ran into him accidentally on the street. The very fact that he dared walk by the side of a foreign correspondent was a measure of his new courage. We were both headed for the Hotel Astoria. With a twinkle of pained humor he informed me that he was now Comrade Rubinstein, carried a portfolio and was in Leningrad on a komandirovka or official business visit. Under the boasts, however, he was still fluttering, poised for flight. He seemed ready to retreat from the new glory into his natural habitat as an outcast.

"Were you ever in Leningrad, I mean Petersburg, before the revolution?" I asked him casually.

I asked it merely to make conversation. But his reaction startled me into attention. He chuckled and looked at me from the corner of his eye, as though he possessed some amusing secret. For a long minute he said nothing. Then he chuckled again.

"A goldene medine," he said finally "a goldene medine this Soviet power."

In all of Russia there is probably no man who has less obvious cause to praise the Soviets than Jacob Haimovich. Yet he was in earnest about it.

"Yes, I was in Petersburg twice," he explained. "Both times illegally. I was rich and came for business, but as a Jew from the pale I had no right to be here. So I avoided the main streets, I couldn't register in any hotel and nobody dared take me in for fear of being denounced."

"So I slept night after night, in an outhouse, a sort of wooden shed, dirty and smelly, after bribing a dvornik, a janitor, to let me in. At home I was one of the respected Rubinstens and in Petersburg I was a zhid who had to sleep in an outhouse."

"But now—I am stopping at the Astoria, no less. They gave me one of the best numbers and the government, my trust that is, is paying for it. Yes, a goldene medine. . . ."

Despite his ordeal and his fear that it might be resumed he was aware of his new dignity as a citizen, the absolute equal of non-Jews. His sufferings had been inflicted upon him as a merchant, as a "former," but not as a Jew.

Within view of the hotel we separated. Courage is one thing, foolhardy bravado quite another. It was not healthy for any Russian, let alone a former Nepman and a perfect scapegoat, to walk into the Astoria in friendly discourse with a foreigner. Suddenly, by common unspoken consent, we were total strangers.

At the desk, as I received my key, I ignored him. I heard the clerk addressing him:

"How are you, Comrade Rubinstein? Here's your key and a letter."

Jacob Haimovich was only flesh and blood after all. Forgetting discretion he looked towards me and smiled happily. I could read that smile as though he had spoken aloud: "Did you hear? Comrade Rubinstein! Me . . . in the Astoria . . . in Petersburg . . . a goldene medine . . ."

A Jewish organization in Brooklyn has invited me to speak on the subject of Jews in the Soviet Union. Doubtless I shall talk in broad generalizations, as is the way of the lecture platform. And I shall feel, when I am through, that I have not begun to indicate the reality.

Because the reality consists, for me, not of Jews in the abstract but of the Jacob Haimovichs and the scores of others whose lives I know. I lack the skill to convey that reality to any audience. It is the new dignity, the new self-confidence, the eradication of something apologetic in the Russian Jew's attitude, that is at the core of the change. Even in his economic distress, in his persecution for political reasons, he is no longer a denizen of the pale. He has problems aplenty, but they are no longer distinctively ghetto problems.

interest to a matter of general discussion when the French government demanded that the League of Nations assign funds for assisting the refugees from the Basin. The demand was made on the ground that the Saar had for fifteen years been under the administration of the League. The League refused to assign any sums for the Saar refugees. The majority of the exiles will therefore probably fall under the jurisdiction of the Commission for Refugees headed by James G. McDonald.

The Federation of Jewish Communities in the Saar this week issued a manifesto which displayed fear for the future existence of Jewish communal, cultural and philanthropic institutions. It was made clear in this manifesto that the only hope of Saar Jewry is in the Franco-German agreement conclude in Rome, which guarantees their security for twelve months only.

What will happen after the twelve months are over is the question which causes greatest anxiety among Saar Jews.

Polish Constitution Blow to Jews

A severe blow was dealt this week to the Jews of Poland, when the Senate adopted the text of a new Polish constitution which will deprive Jewry of representation in the Parliament.

Though the new constitution is not aimed against the Jews, it provides for an electoral system which will eliminate them from sending deputies to the Parliament, unless a special Jewish electoral college is established. Jewish leaders in Poland are now considering the question of approaching the government with the suggestion of establishing such a college, already established in Greece. Whether the Polish government will follow the example of Greece is, however, very doubtful.

Mrs. Felix Warburg will be the guest of honor at a tea given by the New York chapter of Hadassah next Thursday at the home of Mrs. Joseph Stroock, 998 Fifth avenue. Mrs. Warburg, honorary chairman with Mrs. Herbert Lehman of the New York chapter of Hadassah, is leaving shortly for Palestine.

More than 200 women will attend the tea. Mrs. Irma Lindheim, who recently abandoned her New York activities to settle in Palestine as a pioneer worker, will be the guest speaker. Her subject will be "The Romance of Palestine." Mrs. David de Sola Pool is president of the New York chapter of Hadassah.

A coffee dance sponsored by the Temple Israel Union will be held this Sunday evening at the Temple Israel Community Center, 210 West Ninety-first street. According to the tickets, the prospective guests are asked to dine at home that evening but to come to the dance at 8:30 o'clock for coffee and petits-fours. The idea of such a dance is new, and the affair is expected to be successful.

Another invitation for this Sunday evening is extended by the Intermediate Group of Young Israel of Washington Heights. This organization, whose headquarters are at 4046 Broadway, is holding an open house on this evening, the first of a series of Sunday night open houses with special entertainment. For this Sunday night the group plans a bridge and anagrams party, followed by dancing. Admission is free.

On Monday at Steinberg's, Broadway and Eighty-first street, the Mizrahi Women's Organization of America will hold a farewell luncheon for Mrs. Bessie Gotsfeld, who is returning to her home in Palestine. Her visit to the various chapters have stimulated formation of many new groups. The Mizrahi Women's Organization has forty-eight chapters throughout the country, and decided, at the recent convention to Detroit, to embark upon a period of expansion. All the groups are active in cultural and philanthropic activities. Mrs. Samuel Fasten is chairman of the ways and means committee.

Through the efforts of Mrs. Abraham Shapiro, national president of the Mizrahi Women's Organization, Abraham and Strauss has introduced a kosher kitchen which will be available to Orthodox Jewish organizations for their social functions. Prospect Park chapter, the first group to take advantage of this opportunity, arranged a kosher lunch party.

Hadassah announced that in 250 cities, scattered throughout the country, a series of "donor" luncheons will be held from January 25 to April 25 by its chapters. These luncheons are planned for the purpose of raising funds for the Hadassah Medical Organization in Palestine, and Mrs. Max A. Slavin, national fund-raising chairman, estimates that more than 25,000 women will attend these affairs. The luncheons will range from $5 to $30 a plate, and the members are expected to earn or contribute their donations.

On January 30 the Federation of Jewish Women's Organizations is holding its fifteenth annual convention and luncheon at the Hotel Astor. More than 2,500 will be present, and Mrs. David E. Goldfarb will welcome thirty organizations which have joined the Federation during the past year. The morning session of the convention begins at 9:45 o'clock. Mrs. Goldfarb will preside. Mrs. A. Jack Davidson is chairman of the convention and Mrs. Edward N. Mayer chairman of the luncheon. The topic of the day will be: "How Can Women Contribute Toward the Development of Security?" Dr. Solomon Loewenstein, executive director of the Federation of Jewish Philanthropic Societies, will be the guest speaker of the morning. The afternoon program will include the annual address of the president of the Federation and the presentation of the "foremost personalities of the day." WOR will broadcast the afternoon program.

The Home for Aged and Infirm Hebrews, at 105th and 106th streets, west of Columbus avenue, invites its friends and members to attend the annual meeting of donors, associate donors, patrons, members and subscribers, which will take place at the Home on January 27 at 11 a. m. Rose Rothenberg Hasn't Lost
Love of Heritage in SuccessWas First Woman Ever to Prosecute a Case
Before a Jury

In Vienna, years ago, they told the story of a gifted and beautiful singer, born a Jewess although she never mentioned the fact, who was invited to appear at a Court recital. The Empress Elisabeth, interested in the young woman, talked kindly to her after the performance, inquired after her parentage, her upbringing and her religion. The singer said with a blush of embarrassment: "I have no religious affiliations, Your Majesty." The Empress turned away with a shrug: "That is a pity," she said. "Without it you can never be a true artist."

Many Jewish women, alas, who have won honor and renown show the same moral weakness and try to forget that the deepest roots of their nature bind them to their own people, and that when those roots are severed, the best in them is doomed to die. It is, therefore, a delightful and refreshing experience to meet one who always and under all circumstances has been a true daughter of her people, who has not only never hidden but always proudly stressed the fact that she is a Jewess, and who has through her work and her personality gained the respect of the world for herself and her people. She is Rose Rothenberg, known as a brilliant member of the district attorney's office.

Shone at the Bar

Miss Rothenberg, in private life the wife of a well known physician, Dr. Maximilian W. Goldstein, was born in Rumania, but came as a very small child to New York. A graduate of New York University Law School, she became, soon after admission to the bar, an assistant district attorney. She was not only the first Jewish woman to hold this office, but she was also the first woman who ever was chosen to prosecute cases before a jury, and she was soon recognized as a brilliant legal talent.

In all these successes she remained a true daughter of her people and kept the religious traditions of Israel with a beautiful faithfulness. Her free time she devoted and still devotes to civic and social welfare work. She has done splendid things for the Beth Abraham Home for Incurables and she is one of the most valued members of the Daughters of Jacob.

Having no children of her own she works for the welfare of other children, trying to procure for them healthy homes, Summer vacations and the intelligent care of which the underprivileged child is often so sadly in need. She has strong and deep convictions on the matter of charity.

"Frankly," she says, "I don't believe in organized charity, or, let us rather say, I feel that organized charity cannot possibly do enough. There are many persons who would perish rather than appeal to such organizations. It is then that personal service is needed, that personal attention must be offered. The fact, the friendliness, the understanding of a woman is needed to bring to those proud unfortunates the help that must be given to them."

Sees Women as Intense

When one asks Miss Rothenberg whether women are as able in legal work as men she says: "Yes, I think so. But at a greater emotional and nervous outlay. Men do the best they can and let it go at that, but a woman identifies herself completely with her work."

Miss Rothenberg appears a very charming, very feminine personality with a touch of gamin: Impulsive, clever, with a true sense of humor. She smiles readily and becomes deeply serious only when she speaks of her race, her religion.

"I am a Jewess first, last, and all the time," she says. And in listening to her, one feels that if she is proud of her people, her people have also every reason to

You remember the fairy tale of Snow-White, the wicked queen and the magic mirror which showed who was the fairest in all the land? Since those legendary times mirrors have always been the delight and often the despair of women, and even today, despite all emancipation, the New Eve is as deeply interested in her mirror and her looking glass as her sisters of yesteryear.

But today mirrors are not only used to reflect the loveliness of charming women, but also to reflect the loveliness of charming rooms. In short, mirrors have become again an important item in interior decoration. Cleverly arranged, a mirror can give even a small room the appearance of space. Set between two windows as a panel, a mirror lights up the room in a most delightful way, while inserted in the door it is decorative as well as useful.

All kinds of mirrors are used, from the large mirror over a mantelpiece, a mirror often specially adorned with designs either painted or engraved, to the little Colonial Ox-Eye mirror, which looks very pretty over a sofa or a bookcase, especially if hung at a slant, so that the opposite wall and its arrangements are reflected in it.

As to mirror frames, all kinds are to be seen. Narrow gold or silver molding is very good. Mirrors without a frame may look very impressive, especially if in one corner they show a spray or a floral design, and mirrors draped either with silk or velvet are often very appropriate for a particular interior. From many possible designs and shapes you will have to choose what fits best into your home and harmonizes most subtly with your furnishings. The modern mirrors with colored backing are also very effective, but they must be used with care and distinction.

Care and discretion is altogether the watchword for she who desires to add the decorative note of the mirror to her home-appointments. For while the well-placed and cleverly-handled mirror is adding immensely to the charm of the interior, the carelessly or awkwardly-hung mirror is introducing an unharmonious, disturbing note. Never forget that the mirror on your wall reflects, even if not your face, your taste and discrimination. In revealing your personality it has the magic quality of the mirror in the fairy tale.

be proud of her. Among the representative Jewish women Rose Rothenberg occupies a leading place.

Land Hunger

By ABBA HILLEL SILVER

"BLESSED be agriculture! If one does not have too much of it." ... This is the clever bon mot of a delightful cynic, but it cannot be applied to modern Palestine for we have desperately little of agriculture there.

A. H. SILVER

Many Jews fail to remember in these hurly-burly boom years in Palestine that classic Zionism was as much a movement to rebuild the Jewish people as the Jewish homeland. It was motivated by the ardent wish to normalize the economic life of our people along with its political and cultural life. The early devotees of Zionism, the Biluim and the Chovevei-Zion, were actuated as much by the hope of returning the Jewish people to the soil of Palestine as by the hope of building a Jewish state. So were Hess, Herzl and Nordau.

"Back to the land!" was the call of Hirsch Kalischer to the men of his generation, a quarter of a century ago. Rabbi Samuel Mohilever hailed the first Palestine pioneers as the blessed ones who had finally freed themselves from the hard wheel of fate which held so many of their brethren in the Galut tied to trade, business, and "shacher-macher," with all their attendant evils of exploitation, insecurity, and spiritual indignities. Samuel David Luzzatto pleaded with the Jews of his day to return to the ancient occupations of their ancestors in Palestine and to earn their living once again by the labor of their hands, "especially by farming," believing, as did the rabbis of old, that "he who chases after money, and has no land, can have no abiding satisfaction in life."

MOSES HESS visioned the great restoration of Israel in terms of land settlement and cultivation. "You will come to the land of your fathers crowned with the crown of age-long martyrdom, and there, finally, you will be completely healed from all your ills! Your capital will again bring the wide stretches of barren land under cultivation; your labor and industry will once more turn the ancient soil into fruitful valleys, reclaim the flat lands from the encroaching sands of the desert, and the world will again pay its homage to the oldest of peoples."

Herzl, though disapproving of any extreme program for agrarianizing the Jews, nevertheless regarded land settlement as the primary undertaking of Zionism. It is our purpose, he maintained, to attach the Jews to the soil, to make them farmers, so that they will live on their own land and eat the fruits of their own planting and will no longer be mongers and peddlers in the market places of the world.

Nordau spoke of converting the disinherited Jewish proletariat into an agrarian folk and of putting the plough into the hands of those who are at present shopkeepers and tradesmen.

Brenner called for an act of national repentance through labor on land to atone for all the sins of the Galut. ...

THIS nostalgia for the soil was not mere day-dreaming and romancing. It was of course the poetic theme and emotional appeal of Zionism—but it was much more than that. It was the cold clear realization on the part of our people that our economic life in the diaspora, due to uncontrollable historical forces, was distorted, unbalanced, awry, and frightfully insecure. Our economic structure had no foundations in land—where all national economic foundations must be put.

So that the pioneers of Zionism, in thinking of a sound, normal, national life for our people in Palestine, thought first of its foundations—the creation of a large, prosperous and contented farming population. "The glory of the farmers," said Emerson, "is that, in the division of labors, it is his part to create. All trade rests at last on his primitive activity." This basic truth the early pioneers of Zionism clearly sensed.

And, in very truth, the Zionist movement developed exactly along these lines up to recent years. The overwhelming emphasis was always placed on acquiring land and on settling Jews upon it. This was a slow and difficult process but one which unmistakably embodied one of the essential purposes of the movement.

HOWEVER, the mass immigration into Palestine in the last few years seems to have eclipsed this essential purpose. Jewish immigrants to Palestine are going into the towns and not on the land. For every single Jew settling on land, a score or more are crowding into the towns and cities. Many Jews who had previously been settled on land are leaving for the towns where wages are higher.

Forty per cent of the labor in the Jewish colonies is already Arab. The land which we struggled so hard to reclaim from the Arabs is now being turned back to them—except, of course, the title deeds. We are again becoming land lords instead of land workers. It seems as if the economic ghetto structure of Eastern and Western Europe and of America—that crazy pyramid standing on its apex—is being set up in every detail in Palestine where something new and finer might have been built.

It seems that in Palestine, too, we shall become a people of shopkeepers, small manufacturers, money-brokers and speculators, with a plethora of doctors, lawyers, and journalists. The Jewish artisan class, too, is bound to diminish in the self-same way as the farming class is diminishing in relation to the total Jewish population. For when the holy mandate to labor on the land for the sake of national redemption is ignored, the mandate to Jewish labor, generally, will be ignored.

NO one is really to blame for what is transpiring in Palestine. World forces beyond our control are driving tens of thousands of our people every year to Palestine. Agriculturally, Palestine was unprepared for such mass migration, nor were most of the immigrants prepared for the agricultural life. Quite naturally they drifted to the towns and cities, the laborer to seek work, the capitalist to seek investments, the professional man to seek opportunities to practice his profession. No control over middle class immigration was possible, and no central economic planning and social control were, under the circumstances, even attempted.

In the earlier years we had planned on paper how Palestine was to be rebuilt, how the costly mistakes of private competitive capitalism in other countries would be avoided, and how a great social purpose would guide the economic growth and development of the new land which we were building. Life has knocked over our house of cards. Palestine will have to go through the same traditional process of economic evolution and when the time comes it will have to be rebuilt from within, in struggle and conflict—just like all the other countries of the earth.

NEVERTHELESS, it would be criminal folly and a betrayal of our future, if, in these days when the swift tempo of Palestinian development is endangering our perspective on the whole movement, we did not make extraordinary efforts to keep the colonization purposes of the Zionist movement central and primary in all of our planning, and if we did not exert ourselves to the utmost at this time both to divert as many of the newcomers as possible to the land and to acquire more and more land for them.

The new turn of events has made large scale colonization projects immediately imperative. This calls for the opening up of Transjordan at the earliest possible moment for Jewish settlement. On this pivotal issue of Transjordan all the energies of the Zionist movement should now be concentrated.

STAGE

CRITICAL MOMENTS

By GEORGE JOEL

SCREEN

It is probably very unjournalistic to start off a column with the death notices, but Broadway is as much interested in the plays that expire as it is in the new arrivals, and then, after all, it is but fitting to get over with the old business before starting with the new.

All of which is but an introduction to the announcement that since last Sunday no fewer than nine stage productions have gone into permanent retirement.

Heading the list was "The Farmer Takes a Wife," in which June Walker starred. It opened on October 30 and was hailed, with one exception, by the critics as a fine piece of Americana. This column, probably unappreciative of its bucolic virtues, thought it pretty dull.

Next in point of time came "Page Miss Glory," which opened on November 27. Produced by Laurence Schwab, it turned out to be a second-rate imitation of "She Loves Me Not." Opinion about it was divided.

A night later, or, to keep you straight, on November 28, the Group Theatre offered "Gold Eagle Guy" by the once hefty but now cadaverous Melvin P. Levy. The reviewers were kind to his melodrama of the shipping magnate but the piece never did any real business. However, it was bought by a picture company for $72,000, which is more money than Melvin Levy ever had imagined existed.

The other closings are of more recent vintage. The Guild play by Maxwell Anderson, "Valley Forge," which opened on December 10 and was apologetically received, failed to pick up strength and gradually petered out. The other five failed to last four weeks. They were "Music Hath Charm," "Living Dangerously," "Little Shot," "A Lady Detained," and "Battleship Gertie."

The New Plays

This past week only three new plays came into my horizon. They were "Escape Me Never," "Nowhere Bound," and "Crime and Punishment." The first-named, which Charles Cochran, the English producer, presented in association with the Theatre Guild, has already been discussed in this column. To repeat, it is an indifferent play made worthwhile by the gifted acting of the Jewish star, Elisabeth Bergner.

"Nowhere Bound," by Leo Birinski and produced by O. E. Wee and Jules Leventhal, who are noted for their economies, opened inauspiciously at the Imperial, a large house usually occupied by musical comedies. There is nothing comical or musical about "Nowhere Bound." It is the stark story of a group of deportees who are imprisoned in a train across country. This governmental "Deportation Special" is bound from coast to coast, stopping on the way to pick up undesirable aliens who are to be taken to Ellis Island and sent back to Europe.

Mr. Birinski has turned his idea into a crime play. The main character is one of our Public Enemies, who hopes he will be able to escape and return to his activities. There are, of course, many complications, but, alas, the author has side-tracked his "Special" and allowed a mass of not very distinguished verbiage to slow it up.

"Crime and Punishment" is, as the title indicates, an adaptation of the novel of the same name. Fitting Dostoevsky's masterpiece into three acts is an ambitious task and the adapters are to be commended for their efforts, but I found it a trifle tiresome. It seemed to me that the adapters were overwhelmed by the material and were simply unable to cut themselves clear.

"Waiting for Lefty," by Glifford Odets, a one-act play which I am told is one of the best things of its kind, will be presented by the Group Theatre tonight (Sunday) at the Belasco Theatre as part of a benefit for the sinking fund of the Group Theatre. This fund is used for theatrical experimental work.

The Cinema

The Strand Theatre, which some weeks ago was gutted by fire, has reopened. As its first offering, "Bordertown," in which Paul Muni and Bette Davis are the leading players, was shown. Warner Brothers have again scored with this melodrama of the young Mexican who tries to make good in the United States. As the Mexican, Paul Muni is unusually good, and he is aided by the honest and convincing Bette Davis. It is a meaty, strong, absorbing story, and a fine vehicle for Muni.

The Music Hall offers George Arliss in "The Iron Duke." This is the picture about the Duke of Wellington which Gaumont-British has sent to keep the "Henry VIII" tradition alive. Those of you who saw "The House of Rothschild" will remember Arliss as he played opposite another "Duke." It is interesting to see him play the role from the other side of the fence.

"David Copperfield" has been held over at the Capitol.

Name New Members Of Lorca's Play Cast

Cast additions to the new play by the Spanish playwright and poet, Federico Garcia Lorca, are announced by the Neighborhood Playhouse, including Effie Shannon, Edgar Barrier, William Lawson, Louise Glover, Genevieve Belasco and Maurice Freeman. Nance O'Neill and Eugenie Leontovich are the featured players. Irene Lewisohn is directing the play, as yet untitled, which opens February 11.

'Good Fairy' at Music Hall

"The Good Fairy," staging Margaret Sullivan and Herbert Marshall, will have its world premiere at the Music Hall on February 7.

"German Jewish immigrants are adapting themselves very easily to the new environment in Palestine," Dr. Landauer declared. "The distribution of German immigrants in Palestine as between the land and the town is more favorable than with any other group of immigrants. Of the twenty thousand who came into Palestine during the past year, eight thousand have settled in villages and colonies."

Dr. Landauer expressed the hope that the Palestine government will, in the Spring, make available for the third time a considerable number of certificates for German Jewish youths.

Golding Quits Doomington

THIS WANDERER, By Louis Golding. 307 pp. New York: Farrar & Rinehart. $2.50.

Reviewed by HAROLD STRAUSS

One can always sit down with a book by Louis Golding with the comfortable knowledge that he will invariably achieve the effect he is after without straining the reader's credulity. That is three-quarters of the business of successful story-telling. Golding is a craftsman of the old school. Superbly trained, he measures the precise effect he wishes to obtain, goes after it, and gets it. It is this complete imaginative fluency, this handling of illusions as deftly as a stage magician, that gives Golding's stories the richness and enchantment of a modern Arabian Nights, albeit an Arabian Nights shot through with flashes of realism.

With some regret I must report that Mr. Golding has at least temporarily abandoned Magnolia street and his gusty scenes from the life of the Jews of Doomington. Only three of the twenty-two stories in "This Wanderer" concern Jews at all, and one of these but superficially. Golding was at his best in Doomington; he is equally at home in the several quarters of the globe in which these stories are set, but somehow his observations do not seem to be imbued with the same importance as when he writes of the few square miles in which he was born and bred.

Reverses Dreams

The title story is, however, set in Doomington. It concerns a poor Jew who dreamed all his life of the South Sea Islands until the day when, through the death of a rich uncle, he got there. Then he began dreaming of Doomington. "The Haunted Cinema" makes use of an ancient mode of Jewish humor—the device of the rich Jew concerns the legend of a great and bial village for a time, but is in the end outsmarted. Jewish stories are full of this device, but Golding gives it a new form which is not in the least hampered by a modern touch. In the old stories the rich Jew would be a money changer or merchant; in this he is the proprietor of a cinema who wants to use the building which houses the synagogue for his shows. He actually ousts the congregation, but it soon turns the tables on him in one of the best stories in this book.

Legend of a Glass-maker

The last of the Jewish stories concerns the legend of a great and learned glass-maker to design a rose-window for a cathedral in the South of France long ago. In an effort to outdo his rivals, he turns to magic, and uses the blood of a young Jewish boy in his stain. For 500 years the weeping of the soul of "Le Pettit Rabbim" could be heard high up in the nave, until the church began to fall into ruins. And then the last Jew in a region that once had sheltered many Jews obeyed a secret voice which commanded him to release the imprisoned soul. Golding brings this story to a conclusion with great beauty and delicacy, and what is more, shows a remarkable knowledge of Jewish legend and history.

Make Good Reading

Such stories as "The Man in the White Tie" or "Wimpole's Woe," while they are little more than clever spoofing, are entirely enjoyable reading. Golding devotes three stories to the bare-knuckle fist champions of eighteenth and nineteenth century England. The best of these is "Black Frailty," in which race-prejudice and vanity break a great buck Negro from Virginia who threatens to win the championship of England.

Finally, among the stories worth mentioning, is a group of three in which Golding, with seeming unconcern and startling success, conjures up illusions of a nature that involved comparison between him and a stage magician. In "The Tattooed Bird" he induces the appearance and atmosphere of a desert liason between a white woman and a native guide into a New York night club. In "Pompeii in Massachusetts," by way of pointed satire on the follies and exhibitionisms of the extremely rich, he tells how a multimillionaire, vying to shame his moneyed friends, transports Vesuvius bodily from Naples to America—a harmless Vesuvius, so he thinks. But one fine night the imitation volcano belches out fire and destruction upon the millionaire's foolish world.

Two Serbian Woodsmen

And lastly, there is a beautiful story of two brothers, Serbian woodsmen, who were born with the bones of the one's right hand linked inextricably to the other's left. At first there was complete harmony in the lives of the brothers, but then jealousy over a cheap vaudeville dancer, whom they met on their sole visit to a city, causes a bickering which grows into frenzy as it is aggravated by the close attachment. Finally one of the brothers murders the other and chops his hand free. He then pursues and finds the dancer—but the call of his brother's hand, the hand which had clutched his for so many years without cease, is too strong. I leave the denouement to Mr. Golding.

"This Wanderer" can be recommended to any and all readers with confidence. It is sure not to tire you, and it probably will charm you. And perhaps someday Mr. Golding will write about Doomington again.

Among the Literati

The threatened libel suit by Sidney Kingsley, author of "Men in White," against Wolfe Kaufman, author of "Tender Cheeks," because of the latter's article in the American Spectator entitled "The Man Who Won the Pulitzer Prize," will never become a reality. It was probably born in the mind of a Broadway columnist who saw a chance to cause trouble between two friends. Kingsley is much too clever to sue. The only party to benefit would be Covici, Friede, who happen to be the publishers of both young men involved. . . .

Of the ten best-selling novels of 1934, not one was written by a Jew. Among non-fiction best sellers, Arthur Kallet and F. J. Schlink, with their "100,000,000 Guinea Pigs," and Edmund Jacobson, with his "You Must Relax," made the coveted ten. . . . During 1934, 106 more titles were published than in 1933, but the book business was much better. In fact, 1934 was the best year for book-sellers since 1929. The enforcement of the code in which price maintenance is an integral part helped a great deal. It gave, as this column predicted last Spring, the small shops a chance to do some real business. Despite the assertions of large department stores, total sales did not decrease. . . .

This column certainly has not pulled its punches in writing about the American Spectator, but it must admit that the current issue is one of the brightest that magazine has permitted to reach a newsstand. We call your attention to "Let Me Explain You Something," by Jerome Weidman, the best Jewish story of the month; William Saroyan's "My Picture in the Paper," and "The Daisy Miller Case." . . .

The New York Evening Post as a circulation stunt is offering to its readers who clip enough coupons an encyclopedia in six volumes for about eighty-four cents per volume. It is stated that you can get that edition only by clipping the coupons. However, if you do not wish to clip, we tell you that you can procure the same "World Wide" illustrated encyclopedia in any bookshop in the country, in a two-volume edition for $5.98. Blue Ribbon are publishers.

Uncommon Gossip

Publishers are not always right. Knopf, after losing money on Bruno Frank, allowed him to go to Viking. The first book he wrote for that firm was chosen as a boko-club selection. It was a biography of Cervantes. Robert Nathan caused Bobbs-Merrill a headache for many years, but as soon as Knopf took him and his "One More Spring," he jumped into the best-seller class. Simon and Schuster exploited Werfel through many seasons but with no success. His first book for Viking "The Forty Days of Musa Dagh," is leading the fiction lists. Doubleday Doran bought Sinclair Lewis from Harcourt Brace, but the red-topped one has not come near his previous sales. As Major Bowes in his Amateur Night radio program says, "round and round it goes, but where it ends, nobody knows."

CAPITAL COMMENT

BY NATHAN KOENIG

WASHINGTON.

The decision of the National Conference for Palestine to establish an American Commission for the Economic Development of Palestine to coordinate the activities of all public and private agencies engaged in rebuilding the Jewish homeland, has attracted the interest of a number of individuals and government officials here.

The idea of planning is very close to the hearts of New Dealers in Washington. When individuals in other lines of activity begin to think and talk in terms of planning, New Dealers are ready to drop whatever they may be doing in order to listen.

The Roosevelt Administration is striving to develop a planned economy which will operate under this country's traditional form of economic democracy. Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace is a strong advocate of planning and the free discussion of these plans by the people for intelligent decision.

In determining what procedure to follow in the development of a program, especially during the early stages of consideration, the commission may find it well worth while to study some of the writings of Secretary Wallace.

In many respects, the efforts to rebuild Palestine may be compared with efforts now under way to rebuild the United States. To a great degree, both endeavors involve pioneering and a particularly singular kind of leadership and a definite mental enthusiasm.

Secretary Wallace, in his recent book, "New Frontiers," says of the American effort: "Today more and more of our people are again emigrating to a new world. But this new world I am talking about cannot be found on the maps. The pioneers to settle this new world do not cross the ocean. Some people call this new world a state of mind. To enter it calls for an adventurous spirit. All of us, even the old folks who think they can make big profits again in the good old-fashioned way, long to enter this new world. It is a rich land, but it is hard to build the vessels to take us to it because they must be built out of 'mind stuff' and they are not sea-worthy until by common consent we agree they are safe."

Secretary of the Interior Ickes, who addressed the conference, took occasion to remark that the similarity of the attitudes of those who have been striving to rebuild the Holy Land and that of the people of the United States is striking.

"Each is working for a new deal," he said. "We in the United States are struggling to improve the general welfare of our people, just as those who are striving for the advance of Palestine are doing so in order to improve the position of the Jews there. Both of us are trying to prepare the way for those who will come after us, to assure better opportunities to our children and their children, thereby contributing to our share toward making the world a better place in which to live."

The National Conference for Palestine proved to be an attraction for several members of both the House of Representatives and the Senate. At least three of the Jewish members of the House were on hand during the two-day session to shake hands and greet friends and constituents.

Senator J. Hamilton Lewis of Illinois, champion of Jewish rights during the Wilson Administration, proved to be the star performer. He happened to stroll by the banquet hall of the Mayflower Hotel just at the time Rabbi Stephen S. Wise was engaged in oratory. Senator Lewis, who is widely known as an orator, stepped into the hall to listen. The folks at the head table espied him, and soon the Sen-

A new trouble spot in Europe has sprung up as a result of Nazi activities. Norman H. Davis, President Roosevelt's Ambassador at Large, has a keen interest in this spot—the small territory of Memel, the strip of East Prussia along the Baltic which the Treaty of Versailles detached from Germany.

In 1924 the League of Nations appointed Mr. Davis chairman of a special commission to determine the status of Memel, which later was awarded to Lithuania. Reports are that German Nazis are in control of the local government there and have started agitation for a plebiscite whether its inhabitants wish to return to German jurisdiction.

On a small table in one of the executive offices of the Borden Company there reposes a tall, graceful silver loving cup that somehow seems to rivet attention upon itself. Admiring glances are cast at it. Company officials, salesmen from the veteran down to the "cub" are shown it, guests are escorted to the inner sanctum and shown the cup with pride.

Why all this ceremony? Why all the attention? Perhaps the inscription on the cup may serve as the key to the mystery. For neatly engraved on the cup are the following words: "Presented by the Bronx Grocers and Dairymen's Association."

It was the first time in the history of manufacturer-independent retail grocers relations that a silver cup had been presented to the manufacturer by a grocers' Association. And it was Borden's, the largest manufacturers of dairy products in the United States, a company that recognizes the importance of the Jewish grocer and has always extended to him its fullest cooperation, that had won the cup.

To all those who read the inscription it recalls that memorable scene at the 10th Annual Reunion held by the Bronx Grocers & Dairymen's Association, affiliated with the United Independent Retail Grocers Association, when the silver cup was awarded to Borden's as a company showing its cooperation by being represented at the reunion by the greatest number of its men.

Festivities were at their height that evening when the representatives of the manufacturers were called upon by the Committee of Judges to march past in parade. The bands on the platform played the official song of the United Independent Retail Grocers Association. With pencils and pads, the Judges kept careful count. Then came the decision. The Borden Company, having been represented by the greatest number of men, had won the cup.

The great number of men on the company's sales staff was an indication in itself of the great army necessary to bring Borden products to the public, and of the tremendous consumer demand that exists for them.

The silver loving cup was the independent retail grocers' tribute to a company that had proven its keenest interest in their affair, and it is for that reason that the cup today occupies its proud position in one of the Borden Company's inner sanctums.

Mt. Vernon Girl Wins Abel Borden Award

Miss Gertrude Goldman of 441 South First street, Mount Vernon, was adjudged winner of the contest for the best reply of 750 words on the series of articles, "Let's Take Stock," by Abel Borden, which appeared in The Bulletin last month.

Mr. Borden, who judged the replies, informed The Bulletin that Miss Goldman's criticism of his four articles for their failure to penetrate deeply into the basic causes of the situation he described, and her comments on the causes and remedy of the present state of affairs in American Jewish life, impressed him most of the many letters received.

Revisionism Is Inevitable, Says Jabotinsky, Here for Wide Tour

Jews Can Achieve True Homeland in Palestine by Demanding It, Visitor Tells Interviewer—Explains Attitude to Britain

shout their welcome. Formed in military array, bearing aloft the Mogen David banner and the American flag, they cheered and sang while Jabotinsky waited for customs officials to pass on his luggage.

Mingles With Followers

Looking rather weary and piqued after the rigors of a rough crossing, the Revisionist chieftain was not too tired to mingle with the eager crowd which had stood for hours in the freezing temperature, impatient for a glimpse of this man whose last visit to the United States, in 1926, is still discussed as though it had happened yesterday, so deep an impression did he make.

Jabotinsky made it clear that he is in this country "merely to present a point of view" and to help launch the Tel Hai fund campaign in the United States.

On the subject of Revisionism, which he has made his life's work, Jabotinsky is quiet and forceful, with the assured air of a man who sees a sharply defined vision, totally lacking in confusion or compromise, which he knows must be realized.

That vision is a Jewish nation in Palestine.

"How can the Jews achieve a true Homeland in the Holy Land?" the reporter asked him.

"By demanding it," Jabotinsky said quietly.

Revisionists Are Separate
Questioned regarding "secession" of the Revisionists from the Zionist Organization, he said:

"There is no longer any question of secession. The Revisionist Union is a separate organization now. It has not that much"—he snapped his fingers—"interest in the Zionist Congress. Our movement is not a part of any other organization."

"We are glad to negotiate to create understanding, however. As for so-called peace pacts, there is no peace pact. There is merely a suspension of hostilities in their worst form. So far there is only an armistice."

The subject of "secession" brought up the matter of Jabotinsky's recent withdrawal from the Revisionist conference in Krakow, Poland, when Dr. Wolfgang von Weisel of Vienna demanded a clean break with the Zionist Organization.

Explains "Withdrawal"

"I am glad you brought up that point," Jabotinsky said. "Please make it clear for me that my leaving the room while Dr. von Weisel, my very good friend, was speaking was purely a coincidence."

"I was listening to him with great interest at the time. Just then a messenger came in to tell me that an urgent call had come through from Lwow. I had to leave to attend to it. That was all there was to the incident."

Jabotinsky was surprised when one of his American lieutenants told him word had been received that he was no longer to be barred from Palestine, which he has not visited since December, 1929, when his permanent visa was revoked. He was unable to say whether he would return there for a visit. That, he said, depended on the business requirements of the Revisionist Organization.

Although he is reputedly a fiery and inspiring orator in his public appearances, this little, almost haggard man is completely without bluster in his personal contacts. His voice has a soft, caressing quality, which carries with it conviction. He peers at you from behind glasses with his shrewd but kindly eyes, asking questions almost as frequently as he answers them.

"There is one force in the world that really matters," he said, "and that is the force of moral pressure. We Jews are the most powerful nation in the world because we have that force and know how to use it."

Explains Attitude to Britain

Here he explained his attitude toward Great Britain as the mandatory power over Palestine.

"Revisionism doesn't take the 'no' of a British official seriously," he said. "Government opinions change under pressure. But Revisionism does take Zionism terribly seriously. We don't want Zionism to be a plaything."

He enlarges on this point of view in a prepared statement given to all ship news reporters Friday.

"Our method of 'insisting' (that Palestine be a Jewish State) has recently taken the form of a worldwide petition movement," he says there. "The petition is signed not just by 'ideological' Zionists but by those who, apart from any 'ideology,' actually and personally want and must migrate to Palestine."

600,000 Petition Signatures

"It is addressed both to the mandatory government and Parliament and to the governments of those countries where Jewish distress has become a grave problem for the state itself. Six hundred thousand signatures have already been collected, and it will be several millions before we are through."

This, then, is what Jabotinsky means by causing government opinions to change "under pressure."

"Naturally," he said in his perfect English—he is an accomplished linguist—"I very heartily disapprove of the present regime in Palestine."

"On the one hand I have admiration, on the other, worse than criticism for it."

Unequalled Effort

"I admire it because it is an unparalleled example of colonization work. I challenge every nation in the world not only to beat, but to equal, our colonization record."

"On the other hand it is a question whether what we have obtained in Palestine amounts to much in view of what we need."

"And what DO we need?" the reporter prompted him.

"My God!" he exclaimed. "We need a Jewish State!" This was the only occasion during the interview on which he raised his voice above conversational level.

What Jabotinsky means by "a Jewish State" is further illuminated in his prepared statement.

The Jewish State

"From England," he writes there, "we demand a thorough revision of the ideas and methods she has been applying to Palestine. First to be revised is the true meaning of her favorite catchword that 'immigration should keep within the country's economic absorptive capacity.'"

"Of course it should. Why argue such a bromide of a truism? But the absorptive capacity of a country cannot be measured just by its acres: It depends above all on the kind of immigrants. It is the human factor, not soil and moisture, which determines whether a country is to become a beehive or to stay a desert."

Unlimited Capacity

"For immigrants such as the Jews, with our stubborn urge, our technical and financial resources, and our colonizing skill so brilliantly proved, Palestine holds possibilities of absorption practically unlimited; and the English know it themselves. . . .

Speaker at Parley

"Of course we will never agree that any Jewish settler may be treated as an 'illegal' immigrant, no matter whether he has or hasn't a visa for entering his National Home."

"Of course we will not countenance the present flooding of Palestine by Arabs from the neighboring territories."

Resents Huleh Price

"Of course we resent being forced to pay a million dollars baksheesh for the Huleh marshes to a former Syrian concessionaire who has held that concession for twenty years without carrying out any drainage work and a further baksheesh of a couple of million dollars on drainage at our expense of the portion of the area reserved exclusively for Arabs—while the Treasury boasts a surplus of some fifteen millions in cash, all derived from Jewish contributions to revenue."

Jabotinsky feels a casual friendliness towards the Arabs, which he expressed Friday as follows:

"I wouldn't advise anyone to go all the way to Palestine merely to better conditions for the Arabs there; but if the Arabs happen to gain by Jewish enterprise, it's perfectly all right with me, provided it doesn't interfere in any way with the establishment of a Jewish nation there."

A "Providential Movement"

"What chance has Revisionism to become the ruling philosophy of Jewry?" the reporter asked him.

"I consider it inevitable," Jabotinsky replied in that soft yet steel-strong manner of his, "that Revisionism must become the dominating force in Zionism."

He amplified this with a reference to the French philosopher Tocqueville, who lived early in the nineteenth century.

"Tocqueville," Jabotinsky said, "spoke of providential movements which are characterized by the fact that they always gain, no matter whether by victory or by defeat."

"Revisionism is such a providential movement."

For the Zionist Organization, he declared, he feels "absolute indifference."

"If I see them doing a good piece of work," he said, "I will help them. If I see them doing a silly piece of work, I will fight them."

Committee Meets Him

Jacob De Haas was chairman of the reception committee which boarded the S.S. Manhattan to welcome Jabotinsky. Also on the committee were Elias Ginsburg, Leib Altman, Israel Posnansky and Samuel Rosen, all officials of the Revisionist Organization of the United States.

Jabotinsky was to deliver the first of a series of lectures Saturday night at Mecca Temple under the auspices of the League for Jewish National Labor in Palestine. Later he will tour New England and Canada and will fill en-

Second Session Opens at Free Synagogue Sunday

More than 300 delegates of Northeastern Jewish religious groups will gather Sunday afternoon for the second session of the two-day conference of the first regional parley on social justice at the auditorium of the Free Synagogue, 40 West Sixty-eighth street.

Under the chairmanship of State Supreme Court Justice Samuel Harris, delegates will listen to addresses on "The Synagogue and the Social Order" by Lewis Fox; "The Problem of Unemployment" discussed by I. Arnold Ross; "Distribution of the National Income" by Max L. Stolz; "The Socialization of the Basic Enterprises," a paper by Jacob S. Mannheimer, and a report on "The Synagogue Committee on Social Justice" delivered by Frederick Guggenheimer.

In the morning delegates to the conference will attend services at various synagogues where the question of "The Synagogue and Social Justice" will be discussed by the rabbis.

The conference was to open Saturday evening at a session in Temple Emanu-El, where the problem of "The Synagogue and the Social Crisis" in its various aspects was discussed by Dr. Ephraim Frisch, Rabbi Sidney E. Goldstein, Simon Sobeloff and Judge Joseph G. Shapiro.

Tax Commission Member Honored at Commerce Dinner

(Special to the J.D.B.)
CHICAGO, Jan. 25. — Tribute was paid to Barnet Hodes, member of the Illinois Tax Commission and for years a leader in the Jewish communal life of Chicago, at the annual dinner of the Junior Association of Commerce, held at the Auditorium Hotel.

Before a gathering of more than 700 of his friends, civic leaders and the membership of the association, Hodes was presented at the dinner with the Distinguished Service Award for 1934. The award is given annually to the Chicagoan under the age of thirty-five who has done the most for the city.

In announcing the award George W. Young, president of the Senior Association of Commerce of Chicago, said:

"As the chairman of the committee of judges charged with the responsibility of picking Chicago's most outstanding young man from the standpoint of unselfish contribution to this city's welfare, I am happy to report that we were unanimous in our selection."

"A number of very deserving names were presented, but it was the opinion of the judges that Barnet Hodes, for his energetic and untiring civic and charitable efforts on behalf of his city, justly deserves this recognition above all others."

Non-Jewish Youth Group Sends Sum for Refugee Aid After Plea

"A small gift of $5 from a society of young people in Fort Erie, Ontario, which they desire applied to the relief of Christian Jewish refugees in Europe," was received Friday by The Jewish Daily Bulletin.

The contribution was enclosed in a letter which was signed "Agnes Scott Kent." The address was 1201 Dorchester street, West, Montreal.

The communication requested this newspaper to forward the money and an enclosed letter to James G. McDonald, League of Nations High Commissioner for Refugees Coming from Germany. This desire was immediately complied with.

"The gift was sent to me for transmission," the writer said, "in response to a quotation I had made from The Jewish Daily Bulletin to the effect that Mr. McDonald had deplored that 'Christian groups, despite repeated appeals, have never contributed to the upkeep of the 15,000 Jewish Christian refugees.'"

"It will be of interest to you, I am sure, to trace this bit of Bulletin result. Mr. McDonald's report was read in Montreal, a quotation from it read in a little town in Ontario, and in response a sacrificial gift of $5 goes from boys and girls there to suffering Jews in Europe."

Appeal to World

Pointing out that the situation is especially complicated because of the Winter season, the Association appeals to the world for urgent relief and suggests that funds be sent to the headquarters of the committee in Paris, 158 Rue de la Convention.

The price per cover is $25, which enables the fund to purchase one-half a dunam (one-eighth of an acre) in the Holy Land.

Volunteers Praised

Among the volunteer workers for the land redemption banquet, special distinction was earned by Louis Altschul, a leader of Jewish welfare work in The Bronx, who contributed $1,000; Rabbi Henry A. Schorr, spiritual leader of Congregation Adath Israel of The Bronx and chairman of the Jewish National Fund Council for that borough; and the leaders of the Washington Heights Committee consisting of Hyman J.
