ISRAEL REJECTS U.N. RESOLUTION ON RIOTS AS 'TOTALLY UNACCEPTABLE'
By David Landau

JERUSALEM, Oct. 14 (JTA) -- Israel has rejected as "totally unacceptable" a U.N. Security Council resolution condemning the Jewish state for the fatal shooting last week of 21 Palestinian rioters on the Temple Mount in Jerusalem.

An official statement issued by the government Sunday said Israel would not receive or cooperate with the fact-finding team the resolution requested the U.N. secretary-general to dispatch here to investigate the Oct. 8 incident, in which more than 150 Palestinians and several Jews were injured.

But there was no indication the U.N. group would be denied entry to the country, as demanded by Housing Minister Ariel Sharon.

Israel's position, stated in a communique unanimously adopted by the Cabinet, was read to the news media Sunday afternoon by Foreign Minister David Levy.

He said the ministers had "taken into account" the possible U.S. reaction to the government's position, but he said he hoped Israel would be able to persuade Washington that it is the correct one.

The 15-0 Security Council vote Friday night was only the third time in U.N. history that the United States supported a resolution rebuking Israel.

It condemned "especially the acts of violence committed by the Israeli security forces, resulting in injuries and loss of human life" at the Haram al-Sharif, the Moslem name for the Temple Mount, and "other holy places of Jerusalem."

Disregards Attack On Wall

The Israeli communique charged that the Security Council "completely disregards the attack against Jewish worshippers on the holiday of Sukkot at the Western Wall, which is on the Temple Mount, and does not condemn those who attacked the worshippers."

The communique added that "this is a political decision with no connection to reality."

A similar view was voiced by Jewish organizations in the United States, including the American Jewish Committee, Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, Jewish National Fund and Zionist Organization of America, among others.

The Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations, representing 46 Jewish groups, released a statement expressing "dismay that our government should have joined in a one-sided resolution that failed to condemn the onslaught against peaceful Jewish worshippers in prayer at the Western Wall on the festival of Sukkot."

But the conference also said its members "appreciate the efforts of the administration to oppose an even tougher resolution" demanded by the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Seymour Reich, the conference chairman, arrived in Israel on Sunday and expressed support for the Cabinet's decision not to cooperate with the U.N. mission.

Reich is scheduled to meet Monday with

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and Foreign Minister Levy to discuss the latest deterioration in the relations between Israel and the United States.

The Security Council vote ended an exhausting week of debate during which the United States fought energetically against a much harsher resolution introduced by Yemen and urged by the PLO and some of its Third World allies.

No Cooperation With U.N. Team

The draft favored by the PLO would have had the U.N. fact-finding team recommend measures to protect Palestinians in the Israeli-administered territories.

The American draft requires only that it report on the situation.

Washington succeeded in passing the milder draft while keeping intact Arab support of the U.S.-led international force confronting Saddam Hussein of Iraq.

The Israeli Cabinet dismissed the resolution as "totally unacceptable to us." It noted that the government has already appointed an independent commission of inquiry into the incident, which "will present its conclusions and recommendations at the earliest possible date."

The government statement reflected particular anger toward what it charged was the implicit undermining of Israel's sovereign rights to the whole of Jerusalem.

"Jerusalem is not, in any part 'occupied territory,'" the communique said.

"It is the sovereign capital of the State of Israel. Therefore there is no room for any involvement on the part of the United Nations in any matter relating to Jerusalem."

Consequently, it said, "Israel will not receive the delegation of the secretary-general of the United Nations. Israel will continue to assume responsibility, in accordance with its laws, for the safeguarding of holy places and for the security of all residents of Jerusalem, Jews and Arabs."

E.C. TAKES TOUGH STAND AGAINST ISRAEL AND PLANS TO CONSIDER NEW SANCTIONS
By Edwin Eytan

STRASBOURG, France, Oct. 14 (JTA) -- The Temple Mount violence has undone Israel's successful effort less than a month ago to repair its long-strained relations with the 12-nation European Community.

The Parliament of Europe, the E.C.'s legislative body, voted overwhelmingly last Thursday to hold the Israeli government "solely responsible for the loss of human life" when police fired on 3,000 rioting Palestinians in Jerusalem on Oct. 8, killing 21 of them.

In addition to the resolution, described as the strongest condemnation of Israel ever adopted by the Parliament, the delegates reimposed a series of punitive measures pending against Israel, which the E.C. foreign ministers and the European Commission had agreed to suspend after Israeli Foreign Minister David Levy met with them in Brussels on Sept. 17.

Sources on the commission, which is the E.C.'s executive body, told the Jewish Telegraphic Agency that the sanctions "will be applied, and this will take place as soon as legally possible."

The Parliament is expected to consider a new set of even harsher sanctions against Israel as soon as the international confrontation with Iraq in the Persian Gulf is resolved.

New sanctions might have been voted at this time but for the efforts of the Liberal faction, led by Simone Veil of France, a Jewish Holocaust survivor and former president of the Parliament.

The Liberals were successful in postponing new sanctions. But they were forced to withdraw their less severe resolution censuring Israel for the Temple Mount shootings and voted with the majority for the harshly worded draft.

June Sanctions Revived

The sanctions Israel now faces were adopted by the Parliament on June 14 in response to what it called the "bloody repression of Palestinian civilians" in the Israeli-administered territories.

The essentially economic measures remained inoperative because they were not immediately ratified by the E.C. Council of Ministers.

Levy convinced the E.C. ministers last month to shelve them indefinitely. He added to his diplomatic success by prevailing on the Europeans to renew negotiations for further economic and scientific cooperation with Israel, which had been suspended last year.

The E.C. ministers approved a previously postponed trip to Israel by the E.C. commissioner in charge of external affairs, Abel Matutes. They also refrained from raising the issue of sending an E.C. diplomatic representative to Jerusalem to monitor conditions in the administered territories.

Those achievements now have evaporated in the heat of new anger toward Israel. The scientific cooperation has been abandoned, at least for the time being.

The European Commission will proceed with its earlier plan to appoint a special ambassador to Jerusalem to oversee human rights. Matutes' visit will be canceled, and a scheduled Israel-European economic seminar will be scrapped.

ATMOSPHERE IN TERRITORIES TENSE AS INVESTIGATION OF RIOTS BEGINS

JERUSALEM, Oct. 14 (JTA) -- A combination of heavy reinforcements and the exercise of restraint by security forces averted further bloodshed between Israelis and Arabs a week after the Temple Mount riots.

But the atmosphere was tense and far from quiet over the weekend.

About 4,000 Moslem worshipers from East Jerusalem prayed at Temple Mount mosques on Friday, far fewer than normal on the Moslem Sabbath.

Soldiers and police barred the way to West Bank residents, however, leading to an angry demonstration by the disappointed worshipers. They were dispersed by water cannon, tear gas and rubber bullets. No one was hurt.

In Israel proper, Arab villagers marched solemnly to mourn the 21 Palestinians killed by Israeli police on Oct. 8 in the Temple Mount rioting. The processions were peaceful, and the police stayed away.

A general curfew remained in force in the Gaza Strip, and partial curfews prevailed in many towns and refugee camps in the West Bank.

Two Palestinian youths were shot to death during violent confrontations in Jenin and in Tubas village, in the Samaria region.

Meanwhile, B'tselem, the Israeli Information

Center for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories, published a detailed report of its own investigation into the Temple Mount riots.

It asserted, among other things, that the high casualties were evidence of uncontrolled firing into a crowd of people.

It suggested that the small number of injuries to Jewish civilians and security personnel combined raised questions about whether the police faced a life-threatening situation.

B'tselem said the police employed "very dangerous" automatic fire, opened fire without specific orders and continued to fire even after the rioters were fleeing.

A different account filtered from the government's special inquiry commission, which began hearings Sunday in the Prime Minister's Office.

Although no official statements were issued, media reports quoted police officers as testifying that they had no choice but to shoot live ammunition because they had run out of tear gas, were running low on rubber bullets and faced real danger.

The official inquiry is by a three-member panel headed by reserve Gen. Zvi Zamir, a former head of Mossad, Israel's intelligence agency. Its other members are Haim Kubersky, former director general of the Interior Ministry, and Ya'acov Ne'eman, a lawyer.

Police Minister Ronni Milo said he was confident the panel would find the police had acted properly in response to a "wild and dangerous attack on a sacred site by Arab rioters."

QUAYLE SAYS U.S. BACKED RESOLUTION TO PREVENT LINKAGE WITH GULF CRISIS By David Friedman

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14 (JTA) -- Vice President Dan Quayle maintained Sunday that U.S. support for a U.N. Security Council resolution condemning Israel was aimed at preventing the Palestinian issue from being linked to Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein's invasion of Kuwait.

"Many anti-Israeli countries were trying to link the Palestinian question to Saddam Hussein," Quayle explained on the CBS-TV program "Face the Nation."

"President George Bush and the Bush administration resisted that. There is no linkage whatsoever," Quayle stressed.

"I hope that Israel and the Cabinet and the prime minister recognize how far the president went to make sure that the Palestinian question, the occupation of the West Bank, is not related to Saddam Hussein."

But Israeli Defense Minister Moshe Arens said the Security Council resolution had the opposite effect.

"If the purpose of the anti-Israeli resolution at the United Nations was to bolster the anti-Saddam Hussein coalition, in the final analysis it will prove counterproductive," Arens said on the ABC-TV program "This Week with David Brinkley."

He said the riot on the Temple Mount, in which Arabs threw rocks down on Jewish worshipers at the Western Wall, was "a clearcut case of Moslem fundamentalism running wild," and "those who incited the mob bear sole responsibility for the tragedy."

Quayle called the Security Council measure a "good resolution" and urged Israel to cooperate with the U.N. investigators being sent there by the U.N. secretary-general.

JEWISH GROUPS APPLAUD CONVICTION IN SOVIET UNION OF PAMYAT LEADER

By Debra Nussbaum

NEW YORK, Oct. 14 (JTA) -- American Jewish groups have applauded the conviction in Moscow of a leader of the anti-Semitic group Pamyat as an important first step in the fight against anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union, which for decades was sanctioned by the government.

Konstantin Smirnov-Ostashvili was convicted by a Moscow court Friday and sentenced to two years in jail for instigating interethnic enmity.

Smirnov-Ostashvili was convicted of disrupting a Jan. 18 meeting of the April Committee, a liberal writers group with Jewish and non-Jewish members. After leading a gang of 20 to 30 Pamyat members into the meeting hall, he shouted through a bullhorn: "Kikes, go home to Israel!"

The intruders smashed windows and threatened that while they were carrying only megaphones that day, they would return in the future with guns. Some of the writers were reportedly beaten up by members of Pamyat, which is the best known of the anti-Semitic groups flourishing under glasnost.

Smirnov-Ostashvili disrupted the courtroom several times during the three-month trial. He suffered a dramatic "heart attack," which most observers believe he faked, during a court appearance in August. He left the hospital a few days later in apparent good health.

Three weeks after that, he disappeared from the public eye, failing to show up at a scheduled court date. But he was there for the sentencing.

Hecklers interrupted the sentencing, with one Pamyat supporter shouting, "This is a Yiddish, Nazi verdict," according to a report in The New York Times.

First Conviction Of Its Kind

Smirnov-Ostashvili shouted, "It's all a lie!" at the court, according to the Times, insisting that he had committed no crime, but rather had exercised his right to free speech. He charged that extensive press coverage had forced the trial against him.

He denounced President Bush as the leader of a worldwide "Jewish Mafia" and told an applauding crowd of spectators, "I am ready to die for Russia!" as he was led out of the courtroom.

"The conviction is important," according to Micah Naftalin, national director of the Union of Councils for Soviet Jews. "As far as we know, it's the first time there's been an arrest and conviction in a case of anti-Semitism."

"It is clearly a historic moment, and we hope that it reflects a good precedent for the future," he said.

"This strict sentence was historic because it marks the first time the Soviet government has sent a clear, unequivocal message that anti-Semitism will not be tolerated," explained Abraham Foxman, national director of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

The National Conference on Soviet Jewry, in a prepared statement, said it hopes the conviction and two-year sentence will "serve as a warning to other individuals and organizations who promote anti-Semitism within the USSR."

But Glenn Richter, national coordinator of the Student Struggle for Soviet Jewry, said Smirnov-Ostashvili's two-year punishment is not sufficient. "I think he got the publicity he wanted, and that two years is far too little," he said.

GERMANY TO PROVIDE SAUDI ARABIA WITH SOPHISTICATED NEW WEAPONS

By David Kantor

BONN, Oct. 14 (JTA) -- Germany has decided to provide Saudi Arabia with sophisticated weapons, with deliveries to commence some time next year, Saudi diplomats indicated here Sunday.

They said a broad understanding on "defense cooperation" was reached when the Saudi foreign minister, Prince Saud al-Faisal, visited Bonn last week for talks with Chancellor Helmut Kohl and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher.

The diplomats, who spoke on condition they not be identified, indicated that Prince Saud had convinced the German leadership last Thursday that there was no reason why Bonn should refrain from supplying arms to his country.

There was no official confirmation by German authorities.

In fact, on the very morning of Prince Saud's visit, Defense Minister Gerhard Stoltenberg said the government had decided to reject the Saudi arms request at this time due in part to the explosive situation in the Persian Gulf.

But the Saudi foreign minister urged Bonn to play a more active role in the Gulf conflict. He emphasized that his country needed military hardware to repel a possible Iraqi attack.

According to observers here, the government publicly turned down the Saudi arms request to avoid a dispute with the opposition Social Democratic Party less than two months before the first all-German parliamentary elections are scheduled to take place.

There were indications, however, that Bonn would confirm arms sales to the Saudis at some point in the future, probably next year.

Officials meanwhile confirmed that a secret body in the government of what was then West Germany had approved late last year the shipment of Gepard anti-aircraft tanks to Saudi Arabia.

No deliveries have been made as yet, the officials said.

35 DAYS IN STOCKADE FOR OFFICER WHO WON'T SERVE IN TERRITORIES

By Hugh Orgel

TEL AVIV, Oct. 14 (JTA) -- The first career officer in the Israeli army to refuse to serve in the administered territories was jailed last week for 35 days in a military stockade.

Lt. Nir Keinan, 22, of Jerusalem, deputy commander of the crack Golani Brigade, reportedly called his soldiers together to tell them of his resolve to refuse to serve in the Gaza Strip.

Keinan previously served several terms in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. He reportedly told his company that he had qualms for some time about serving in the territories and finally decided to refuse an order.

Keinan is believed to be the 125th soldier jailed for refusing such service. All but nine were reservists. The rest, apart from Keinan, were soldiers serving their compulsory military duties.

Keinan's jail term was one of the most severe sentences yet meted out.

A spokesman for Yesh Gvul (There's a Limit), an organization that encourages refusal to serve in the territories, said there had lately been a tendency not to press charges against reservists refusing service, offering them instead alternative army service within the Green Line, or Israel's pre-1967 boundaries.

DARTMOUTH REVIEW ENRAGES COMMUNITY AS HITLER QUOTE SPURS INVESTIGATION

By Andrew Goldsmith

NEW YORK, Oct. 14 (JTA) -- Following angry demonstrations and heated debate concerning a quotation from Hitler's "Mein Kampf" that appeared on the masthead of The Dartmouth Review, the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith has been invited to help investigate what the editor of the Review called "a criminal act of sabotage."

The Review, financed by a powerful conservative network, is published off campus by Dartmouth College students but is unaffiliated with the college. Three of its 24-member staff have resigned since the controversial issue was published Erev Yom Kippur.

The text, which was inserted in place of a quotation from Theodore Roosevelt which normally runs in that space, read, "I believe today that I am acting in the sense of the Almighty Creator. By warding off the Jews, I am fighting for the Lord's work."

Kevin Pritchett, editor of the Review, called the quotation "sick, ugly and anti-Semitic. We are not laughing at the murder of the 6 million, and we intend to find out who placed the quote into the system," he said.

The editors of the Review issued an apology for the appearance of the passage, saying it had been "slipped in" by an unknown staff member. The apology read: "The human filth that placed this trash in our newspaper made a mockery of this credo. This cancer among our ranks, we assure you, will be sought out and thoroughly punished."

According to Pritchett, the masthead was changed following the final review of the text prior to publication. The Review has invited the ADL to take part in the investigation.

Leonard Zakim, New England regional director of ADL, said, "This latest offense to intelligent people is further evidence that the pattern of offensive coverage and writings the paper has published is not the fruit of well-intentioned intellectual provocation, but instead reflects an intentional undermining of respect for Jews, blacks and others."

Students Stage A Rally

When questioned about the investigation, Zakim responded, "We will not be looking for fingerprints. We feel it is a question of how to reconcile responsibilities and sensitivity," he said.

Zakim also expressed concern about the "rush to defend the Review by some conservatives." He feels the rights of the First Amendment are being used "as a disguise for volatile and insensitive things the Review has done."

A rally was held Oct. 4 by the Student Assembly at Dartmouth, to demonstrate that the Review is not supported by the student body.

In three days, more than 2,000 of the school's 4,000 students signed a petition disavowing connections with the Review. A similar petition was circulated in 1989 on which more than 1,000 students signed.

The Review has a history of controversial incidents that have coincided with holidays or campus events.

In 1980, the newspaper sponsored a champagne and lobster brunch on the day of a fast intended to draw attention to world hunger. In 1986, on the anniversary of Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday, 10 Review staffers helped tear down shanties that had been erected on college grounds to protest apartheid policies in South Africa.

In 1988, the newspaper published a cartoon, on the 50th anniversary of Kristallnacht, depicting Dartmouth President James Freedman, who is Jewish, as Hitler.

Freedman and The Dartmouth (the official undergraduate newspaper of Dartmouth College) have both condemned the publication of the "Mein Kampf" quotation.

Conservatives Defend Paper

Freedman denounced the Review for "an act of moral cowardice that continues the publication's 'reprehensible pattern' of discriminatory attacks. 'Appalling bigotry of this kind has no place at this college or in this country,'" said Freedman.

Rep. Chester Atkins (D-Mass.) has issued a statement calling the incident "yet another example of this publication's policy of whipping up hate with vicious attacks."

An aide to Rep. Mel Levine (D-Calif.) says the Jewish congressman plans to circulate an open letter to Washington lawmakers asking Dartmouth alumni and political conservatives to withdraw support for the Review.

Conservative journalist William Buckley Jr., one of the newspaper's key national supporters, said the incident had to be a fluke, because it was so far out of line with the newspapers editorial policies.

Buckley joined in criticizing Freedman's counterattack, as did Sen. Gordon Humphrey (R-N.H.).

"The hysterical response of Freedman and others" is "irresponsible," said Humphrey, who once helped raise $7,000 at a Washington benefit for the Review. "The editors have denounced it and disassociated themselves from it."

Zakim of ADL expressed concern over Humphrey's statement.

ISRAEL TELEVISION BEGINS BROADCAST OF ENGLISH-LANGUAGE NEWS PROGRAM By Hugh Orgel

TEL AVIV, Oct. 14 (JTA) -- The Israel Broadcast Authority's first English-language newscast for television aired Sunday night, after eight years of planning that included seemingly endless arguments over who would bear responsibility for the service.

The 15-minute English news bulletin will be broadcast at 8 p.m. each weekday evening, following the regularly scheduled Arabic-language broadcasts and before the start of the news in Hebrew.

On Friday nights, news bulletins in English will be broadcast a half-hour early.

English news broadcasts from Jordan have long been available, albeit with a different political slant. A proposal to air Israel Television's new English news program at 10 p.m., to directly compete with the Jordanian broadcast, was scrapped because it would pre-empt prime-time favorites, such as the American program "Dynasty."

Israel Television's Anan Safadi, a veteran journalist, has been appointed executive producer of the new program.

Safadi, who is from a prominent Arab family in Beit She'an, is equally at home in Hebrew, Arabic and English.
